BOSTON MUSEUM,

Tremont Street, ... Boston.

ALWAYS OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than

SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,

to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated

PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,

swelling the already immense collection to upwards of

HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,

the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely

NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,

One Hundred Feet in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to

Mock Reality,

and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of

CHRIST'S LAST SUPPER

with His Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.

THE PRODIGAL SON,

returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of

THE CRUCIFIXION,

composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.

Christ Disputing with the Doctors;

a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,

in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

THE SIAMESE TWINS,

and their beautiful American wives.

Representation by nine figures, of the

MASSACRE BY PIRATES

of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.

HORRORS OF SLAVERY,

as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.

MURDER OF MISS McCREA,

by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.

INTEMPERANCE,

and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.

Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. The cost of the above, and the immense collection of

One Hundred of Cabinet Size,

BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,

obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,

OIL PORTRAITS

of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;

EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,

and ancient Sarcophagus, 3000 Years old; and an entire

Family of Peruvian Mummies:

the DUCK-BILLED PLATYPUS, the connecting link between the BIRD and BEAST, being evidently half each;—the curious half-fish, half-human

FEJEE MERMAID,

which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, the years 1846, '47, and '48, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;

Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;

ANIMALS and BIRDS of every Indian; Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious

SAW AND SWORD FISH,

in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unpuilled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

In Addition to which, and

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,

visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent

THEATRICAL ENTAINMENTS,

given EVERY EVENING, and WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, by a Company of Comedians and an Orchestra of Musicians, admitted to be SUPERIOR to any ever before collected in this country, with the aid of

Stage and Scenic Arrangements,

the most grand and superb ever seen in either Europe or America, thus warranting the universal admission that the Boston Museum, besides being the most comfortable and genteel, is also the

Cheapest Place of Amusement

IN THE WORLD!! A single visit will prove the truth of this assertion, as the admission is only

25 Cents to the Whole!!!

MISCELLANY.

EDWARD LAYTON'S REWARD.

'I could not have believed it!' exclaimed Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw. 'I could not have believed it!' she repeated over and over again, and she fell into a fit of abstraction.

Her husband, who had been glancing wearily over the pages of a magazine, turning leaf after leaf without reading, or perhaps even seeing the heading of a page, at length said, 'I could!'

"You have large faith, my dear,' observed the lady.

'Fortunately, for Selina, I have no faith in him,' was the reply.

Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw was not an eloquent person; she never troubled her husband or any one else with many words; so she only murmured, in a subdued tone, 'Fortunately indeed.'

'What a fellow he was!' said Mr P Bradshaw, as he closed the magazine. 'Do you remember how delighted you were with him the evening of the tableaux at lady Westrophe's? There was something so elegant and dignified in his bearing; so much ease and grace of manner; his address was perfect—the confidence of a well bred gentlemen, subdued almost, but not quite, into softness by the timidity of youth. This was thrown into strong relief by the manners of the young men of the family, whose habits and voices might have entitled them to take the lead, even now in the go-a-head school which then was hardly in existence—at all events in England.'

'You was quite as much taken with him as I was.'

'No, my dear, not quite. Edward Layton was especially suited for the society of ladies. His tastes and feelings are—or were at that time—all sincerely refined; he was full of the impulse of talent, which he had never the strength to bring forth; his thoughts were ever wandering, and he needed perpetual excitement particularly the excitement of beauty and music, to bring them and keep them where he was. He was strongly and strangely moved by excellence of any kind, so that it was excellence; and the only thing I ever heard him express contempt for was wealth!—yes wealth!'

'I could not have believed it,' said Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw.

'That particular night it was whispered he was engaged to Lelia Medwin. When she sung, he stood like a young Appollo at her harp, too entranced to turn over the leaves of music, his eyes overflowing with delight, and the poor little girl was so bewitched by his attentions that she fancied every whisper a declaration of love.'

'Shameful!' said Mrs Pierce Bradshw.

'Then her mother showed every one what a lovely sketch he had made of Lelia's head, adding, that indeed it was too lovely; but then he was a partial judge.'

'She was a silly woman,' observed the lady.

'She would not have been considered so if they had been married,' replied the gentleman. 'Mammas have no mercy on each other in those delecate manœuvings. Well, he waltzed with her always; and bent over her, willow fashion; looked with her at the moon; and wrote a sonnet which she took to herself, for it was addressed 'To mine own dear——;' and then, when, about eight weeks afterwards, we meet him at the dejeuner at Sally Lodge, he was entranced with Lizzy Grey's guitar as he had been with Lelia's harp sketched her little tiger heed for her grandmother, waltzed with her, bent over her, willowfashion, looked with her at the moon and wrote another sonnet addressed 'To the loved one.'

'Such men——' exclaimed Mrs Pierce Bradshaw. She did not finish the sentence but looked as if such men ought to be exterminated. and so they ought!

'There was so much about him that I liked; his fine talents, good manners, excellent position in society, added to his good nature and—'

'Good fortune,' added Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw.

'No, Mary,' said her husband, quietly, 'I never was a mammon worshipper. This occurred if you remembem, before the yellow pestilence had so completely subverted London, that the very aristocracy knelt and worshipped the golden calf; and no blame to the calf to receive the homage, whatever we may say of those who paid it.'

'I did not mean that as a reproof, Pierce,' replied his wife, most truly. 'I think it quite natural to like young men of fortune—we could not get on without them, you know; and it would be very imprudent—very imprudent indeed—to invite any poor young man, however excellent. When we want to get those young girls, our poor nieces, off, I declare it is quite melancholy. Jane is becoming serious since she has grown so thin; and I fear the men will think Belle a blue, she has so taken to the British Museum. Oh, how I wish people would live, and bring up, and get off their own daughters! Four marriageable nieces with such farthing fortunes, are enough to drive any poor aunt distracted!

This was the longest speech Mrs. Bradshaw ever made in her life, and she sighed deeply at its conclusion.

'You may well sigh!' laughed the gentleman; 'for the case seems hopeless. But I was going to say, that as I knew him better, I was really going to take the young gentleman a little to task on the score of his philandering. Lelia was really attached to him, and had refused a very advantageous offer for his sake; but the very next week, at another house, I found him enchined by a sparkling widow—correcting her drawings, paying the homage of intelligent silence and sweet smiles to her wit, leaning his white-gloved hand upon her chair, and looking in her eyes with his most bewitching softness. The extent of this flirtation no one could anticipate; but the sudden appearance of Lady Di' Johnson effected a total change. She drove four-in-hand, and was a dead shot—the very antipodes of sentiment. We said her laugh would drive Edward Layton distracted, and her cigarette be his death. But, no! the magnificence of her tomboyism caught his fancy. He enshrined her at once as Diana, bayed the moon with hunting songs, wrote a sonnet to the chase, and then ,with his own hands, twisted it into a cigarette, with which her ladyship puffed it to the winds of heaven, while wandering with the Lothario amid a grove of fragrant limes. The miracle was that at breakfast the next morning Lady Di' was subdued, voted driving unfeminine, and asked Edward to take the reins for her after lunch. You remember we left them there; and I next met him at Killarney, giving his chesnut locks to the breeze, his arm to the oar, and his eyes to a lady of blue stocking celebrity, who never having had many lovers, was inclined to make the most of the present one. Circumstances rendered me acquainted with some facts relating to his 'flirtations,' if his soft and sentimental ways could be called by a such a name. I had seen poor Lelia at Baden-Baden; and I dare say you can recall what we heard of another love of his nearer home.—Well, I encountered my Hero of Ladies that very evening, wandering amid the ruined aisles of Mucross Abbey. I saw that his impressible nature had taken a thoughtful, if not a religious tone from the scene. And he commenced the conversation by declaring that, 'He was a great fool.'

'Knave, rather,' said Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw.

'No,' replied her husband; 'not a knave, but a singular example of a man whose feelings and susceptabilities never deepin into affeetion, unstable as water—tossed hither and thither for want of fixed principles, and suffering intensely in his better moods from the knowledge of the weakness he has not the courage to overcome. I was not inclined to let him spare himself, and did not contradict his opinion that he was a 'fool,' but told him he might be what he pleased himself, so long as he did not make fools of others.'

'I tell every woman I know that I am not a marrying man,' he replied.'

'That,' I said, 'does not signify as long as you act the lover, each fair one believing you will revoke in her favor.'

'I give you my honor,' he exclaimed, 'as a man and a gentleman, I never entertained for twenty-four hours the idea of marrying any woman I ever knew.'

'The villian!' exclaimed the lady. 'I hope, Pierce, you told him he was a villian!'

'No; because I knew the uncertainty of his disposition; but I lectured him fully and honestly, and yet said nothing to him so severe as what he said of himself. I told him he would certainly be caught in the end by some unworty person, and then he would look back with regret and misery upon the chances he had lost, and the unhappiness he had caused to those whose only faults had been in believing him true when he was false.'

'Better that,' he answered 'than marrying when he could not make up his mind.'

'Then why play the lover?'

'What assurence!' said Mrs. Pierce Bradshaw.

'I am sure,' I said, 'Delia was very charming. Lelia Medwin was an excellent, amiable little creature, with both good temper and good sense.

'That was it,' he said: only fancy the six-foot-one-and-three-quarters wedded to bare five feet! The absurdity struck me one night as we were waltzing and whirling past a looking glass; I was obliged to bend double, though I never felt it till I saw it.'

'Really, I have not patiecnce,' observed Mrs. Bradshaw. And so her feelings were to be tranpled upon because she was not tall enough' to please him! Why did he not think of that before?'

'But there was Lizzy Grey, related to half the aristocracy, with a voice like an angel.'

'A vixen,' he said 'tnough of exquisite beauty—could have torn my eyes out for the little attention I paid Mrs. Green.'

'Little attention!' I repeated; 'more than little.'

'Her wit was delicious,' he replied; 'but she was a widow! Only fancy the horror of being compared with 'My dear first husband!'

'Then your conquest of Lady Di' Johnson! How badly you behaved to her!'

'She was magnificent on horseback; and her cigerette as fascinating as a fan of a Madrid belle, or the tournure of a Parisian lady. They were her two points. But when she relinquished both, I believe in compliment to me, she became even more commonplace than even the most commonplace woman.'

'The puppy!' muttered the lady; 'the dreadful puppy! I could not have believed it!'

Mr. Bradshaw did not heed the interruption, but continued;

'And who,' I inquired, 'was the lady of the Lake? I do uot mean of this lake, for I see her reign is already over—your passion expired with the third chapter of her novel, which I know she read to you by moonlight—but the fair lady of Geneva, whose betrothed called you out?'

'Her father was a sugar boiler,' was the quiet reply; 'a sugar boiler,' or something of the kind. What would my aristocratic mother say to that? Of course I could have had no serious intention there. Indeed I never had a serious intention for a whole week.'

'But, my dear fellow, when presents are given, and letters written, and locks of hair and vows exchanged—'

'No, no!' he exclaimed; 'no vows exchanged! I never broke my word to a woman yet. It was admiration for this or that—respect, esteem, perhaps a tender bewilderment—mere brotherly love. And in that particular instance her intended got angry at my civility, I know I was wrong, and to confess the truth, I am ashmed of that transaction,—it taught me a lesson; and but for the confounded vacillation of my taste and temper, I might perhaps have been a Benedick before this. You may think it puppyism, if you please; but I am really sorry when I make an impression, and resolved never to attempt it again; but the next fine voice or fine eyes——'

'Or cigarette,' I suggested; and then I said as much as one man can say to another, for you know a woman can say much more to a man in the way of reproof than he would bear from his own sex; but he silenced me very quickly by regrets and good resolutions. It was after that our little niece, Selina, made an impression on his heart.'

'I did not know all you have now told me,' expostulated his wife. 'I own I thought it would have been a good match for Selina! and he was evidently deeply smitten before he knew that she was your niece. I managed it beautifully; but you cut the matter short by offending.'

'There, say no more about it,' said the sensible hnsband; 'you thought your blue eyed fair haired, doll like favorite, could have enchained a man who had escaped heart whole from the toils of the richest and rarest in the land. It really is fearful to see how women not only tolerate, but pursue this sort of men. You call them villians,' and I know not what, when you are foiled; but if you succeed, you temper it; they have been a little wild, to be sure—but then, and then, and then—you really could not refuse your daughter; and add, 'Men are such creatures that if the world knew but all, he is not worse than others,'

'For shame, Pierce! how can you?' said the lady.

'I told him then,' continued Mr. Bradshaw, 'that he would take the crooked stick at last;' but that he should not add a tress of Selina's hair to his collection, to be turned over by 'his WIFE' one of these days. Of course he was very indignant, and we parted; but I did not think my prophecy would come true so soon. I have long since given up speculating how marriages would turn out, for it is quite impossible to tell. If women could be shut up in a harem, as in the East, a man who was ashamed of his wife might go into society without her; but for a refined and well educated gentleman, as Edward Layton is, to be united to the widow of a suger boiler!—yes, absolutely!—who is an inch shorter than pretty Lelia, and more tiger-headed than Lizzy Grey, and who declares she hates music, altaough her dear first husband took her hoften to the Hopera who adds deformity to shortness, talks louldly of the *hin*fluence of wealth, and compars the presentations at the Mansion House, that she has seen, to those at St. James' which she not yet seen! Verily Edward Layton has had his reward."

For the Quincy Patriot.

ELEVATION OF THE DISTRICT SCHOOLS.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE HIGH SCHOOL.

MR. GREEN.—I must crave an apology for troubling you again with my hastily written and illy concocted articles. But feeling a little chagrined that, 'Hancock,' should accuse me of misfiguring, I thought I should like to run the work over again. If this noble Ceaser dares buffet the billows of the Tiber of mathematics, he shall not lack for a customer.

As before stated it will not cost far from $1000 per annum to supply teachers, fuel, diagrams, maps, apparatus, piano-forte, &c, for his proposed High Schools, to say nothing about the interest on the expense of site and building. But he intimates that this interest will be defrayed by the rise of property and rents. Now, as we are both a trying to help the poor man, we must desist from any measure calculated to take money from the laboring mechanic and placing it in the hands of the more fortunate neighbor. Rents, in the central portion of the town, are already high enough to pay a good percentage, but in all other portions they are not so. Indeed, much property lies almost dormant, and among the causes is the want of more ample means of education as well as of communication.

If the inhabitants of the town were more compactly situated and they felt able to build side-walks in city fashion, the objections to a central school would not weigh so heavily. If the voters of this town were obliged to attend town meeting two hundred and thirty times per year, I fancy their attendance would be quite irregular. Children could not be expected to do as well in this respect, as men. And though the town is now indictable, still it would seem next to an immortal act for any citizen to complain of us without any justifiable cause. Has any citizen, for the past year, had reason to complain that any of our teachers were not competent to teach his children in all the branches they were prepared to be taught in? Have not all the teachers been desirious to advance their pupils to higher studies? Would they have not done so, had assistance been furnished them whereby they could have been able to do nearly twice the work they have done?

I insist that a faithful assistant can render great service to the master and hear as many classes during the day as he can himself. Now, if 'Hancock,' has any personal knowledge of our schools, he must know that the first classes in our Grammar schools are the only scholars the teachers will have to put into higher studies. He must be aware also that two new studies will be as much as will be advisable for them to pursue at once. Consequently, there will be but two recitations added to any of the great schools. For instance, Algebra, and Latin or Greek, and the common exereises in reading, spelling, penmanship, composition, declamation and music will be as muchas any, class of pupils ought to have upon their mind at once.

Can 'Hancock,' show any reason why Latin and Greek and Geometry and so on cannot be taught in our present schools as well as in a new one? What is the object then of establishing a High school when its pupils will be obliged to pursue, more or less, the same studies they are new pusuing; Is it not obvious that teachers can teach common branches better, because masters of higher ones;—who, for instance, can teach reading, better, because familiar with the principles of elocution and rhetoric, and with the etymology of words from whatsoever language derived;—who can teach writing letter, because adepts in drawing;—who can teach English Grammar better, because familiar from the study of other languages, with the principles of universal grammar;—who can teach geography better because acquainted with astronomy, geology, statistics, and civil and naturally history;—and who can teach arithmetic, because masters of the higher mathematics?

When the wealth of the town is sufficient to bear the expense, and the proficiency of the scholars in all the the primary branches has prepared them to enter upon a higher course, the law will not only authorize a town to demand instruction in a more advanced course, but its true spirit will require the examining committee to reject a candidate who is not competent to carry the pupils through it. Vide, Cushing v, Newburyport, S. J. C. Nov. Term, 1746, Essex.

I can 'demonstrate,' that six units plus six sixths of a unit, will make seven units. My plan then is simply to assign a reasonable value to the seventh unit and to merge a portion of the same in each of the six units. 'A little leaven leventh the whole lump.' 'Will not six men qualified to teach the High School studies cost more than one?' In reply, let me put the question in its proper form. Will not seven men, and one assistant in the High School, cost more or as much as six men and four assistants in the Grammar schools? Let us see. There will be $1000 per year for teaching and incidentals, also about $500 interest on cost of building and site, making in all $1500! For the past year the town has expended for teachers and fuel about $4000.

The plurality system will not add to the present incidental expenses, a jot. We are not to establish six new schools, but to add a trifle to those we are already obliged to maintain.—Five hundred dollars per year or about thirty-seven cents per hour, on duty, ought to hire a competent teacher for each of the Grammar Schools, and $100 for each of the small districts. The four female assistants can doubtless be procured for $150 each. This expense for assistants is something new in this town but the schools have suffered for the want of them, especially in the winter, for a number of years. Indeed, the Grammar schools cannot go on properly without them, or the establishment of new district, for the next year, even with the proposed High School. We estimate the cost then of the High School system at $5500. If we add to this the expense of four assistants for the Grammar schools, the whole will be $6100!

If we can hire our teachers for the prices above stated, we shall set down the cost of the plurality plan at $4164, leaving a balance in the pockets of the tax payers of $1936.—I leave it to the citizens, the jury in this case, to decide which system will be best for their present, as well as future welfare. But the objector will say, we have not placed the wages high enough. Let us say then, $2400 for masters—$600 for assistants—and $1364 for female teachers and fuel the same as last year and we shall have a sum of $5364 which will still leave a balance, in favor of the Elevation, of $736. We have thus far said nothing about paying some eight or nine thousand dollars for the site and building but only the annual interest. We therefore conclude that the plurality plan will be less expensive or not more expensive than the other. 'Quod erat demonstrandum.'

Why does that rich town of Dorchester defer the establishment of a High School? Simply, because her children are spread over so wide a territory, that regular attendance, at a central school, would be impracticable. She adopts the policy of enlisting the good feelings of all her citizens in the cause of education and inducing them to believe they want what she asks them to purchase. On the same principal the town of Lynn (now a city) commenced raising her district schools to a high standard first, and in 1850, when numbering over twelve thousand inhabitants, she established a High School in reality, for the special benefit of a certain class of scholars, which, at present, are to be found among us like 'angel's visits.'—But the day is not far distant we opine, when we shall behold, under the genial influence of our proposed system of Elevation, the young minds of Quincy, that, are now just sprouting into intellectual immortality, pursuing, with ardor and zeal, the study of the renowned classics of ancient as well as modern literature, at the Adams Academy.

The proposed High School must be for the benefit of all the inhabitants to make it obligatory upon the town to support it. It is not sufficient to establish such a school for the benefit of one part of the town only, 16 Mass. Reports 141, Commonwealth v. Dedham.—It is not competent to establish such a school for the benefit of the 'greatest number,' but it must be for the benefit of the whole. The doctrine of Unitarianism is not to be found in this Act. Its friends may proclaim that it is ostensibly for the good of all; but it is not really so. It is a blessing, but the sacrifice of obtaining it renders it an evil. We may be told that there is plenty of gold in California for the benefit of us all, but the exposure to health and morals, as well as the trouble and expense oi arriving at it, more than counterbalance its advantages. Where will the defenders of this institution locate it, so as to render it a benefit to all? 'Echo answers, where?'

I am 'serious' when I 'imagine that the plurality plan will draw wealthy men to the outskirts' as well as to the interior of the town. The most romantic and picturesque parts are its seaboard and outskits, and therefore, other things being equal, rich men from the city will select those ample spots for their country seats. But there is no reason to believe that permanent business men will increase fast in any part of the town at present. Mechanics and laborers will increase the most rapidly, and as land is much cheaper in the outskirts, they will naturally tend from the centre. By adopting the plurality substitute or the Elevation of of the Gram. and Dist. Schools, we shall enable our children to attend schools of the first rank, at their accustomed places. The Act of May 31, 1850, Chap. 274, fully authorize this system.

It is to be hoped that no parsimonious spirit will be manifested towards the schools in future. And although England lost the American Colonies by taxation, and even Rebellion once raised his hydra head in our dear old Bay State from a kindred cause, yet Quincy need not be alarmed for fear of losing the affections of her noble citizens for Education and Progress, if she raise for the support of schools the present year, the good round sum of $5000, equal to about one dollar to every inhabitant. This, together with what is now in the treasury, and the income of the Coddington and Mass. school funds, will make over $5500, a sum, which, if judiciously expended, will go very far to place all our schools in the rank they should of right hold in this ancient and thrice honored Town.

SOLON.

NEVER TOO OLD TO LEARN.

The following well authenticated facts well illustrate the principle that man is never to old to learn:

Socrates, at an extreme old age, learnt to play on musical instruments. This would look ridiculous for some of the rich old men in our city, especially if they should take it into their heads to thrum a guitar under a lady's window which Socrates did not do, but only learnt to play upon some instrument of his time, not a guitar, for the purpose of resisting the wear and tear of old age.

Cato, at eighty years of age, thought proper to learn the Greek language. Many of our young men at thirty or forty, have forgotten even the alphabet of a language, the knowledge of which was necessary to enter college, and which was made a daily exercise through college. A fine comment upon love of letters, truly.

Plutarch, when between seventy and eighty, commenced the study of the Latin. Many of our young lawyers, not thirty years of age, think that nisi prius, seire facias, &c., are English expressions; and if you tell them that a knowledge of the Latin would make them appear a little more respectable in their professions, they will reply that they are too old to think of learning Latin.

Boccacio, was thirty-five years of age when he commenced his studies in polite literature. Yet he became one of the three great masters of the Tuscan dialect, Dante and Petrach being the other two. There are many among us ten years younger than Boccacio, who are dying of ennui, and regret they were not educated to a taste for literature, but now they are too old.

Sir Henry Spelman neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became the most learned antiquarian and lawyer. Our young men begin to think of laying their seinors on the shelf when they have reached sixty years of age. How different the present estimate put upon experience from that which characterised a certain period of the grecian republic, when a man was not allowed to open his mouth in caucuses or political meetings, who was under forty years!

Colbert, the famous French Minister, at sixty years, of age, returned to his Latin and law studies. How many of our college-learnt men have ever looked into their classics since their graduation?

Dr. Johnson applied himself to the Dutch language but a few years before his death.—Most of our merchants and lawyers of twenty-five, thirty and forty years of age, are obliged to apply to a teacher to translate a business letter written in the French language, which might be learnt in the tenth part of the time required for the study of the Dutch; and all because they are too old to learn.

Ludovico Monaldesco, at the great age of one hundred and fifteen, wrote the memoirs of his own times—a singular exertion, noticed by Voltaire, who was himself one of the most remarkable instance of the progress of age in new studies.

Ogibly, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Latin and Greek till he was past fifty.

Franklin did not fully commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his fiftieth year. How many among us of thirty, forty, and fifty, who read nothing but newspapers for the want of a taste for natural philosophy? But they are too old to learn.

Accorso, a great lawyer, being asked why he began the study of law so late, answered that indeed he began it late, but he should therefore master it the sooner. This agrees with our theory, that healthy old age gives a man the power of accomplishing a difficult study in much less time than would be necessry to one of half his years.

Dryden, in his sixty-eight year, commenced the translation of the Iliad; and his most pleasing productions were written in his old age.

We could go on and cite thousand of examples of men who commenced a new study and struck out into an enterly new pursuit, either for livelihood or amusement, at an advanced age. But every one familiar with the biography of distinguished men, will recollect individual cases enough to convince him that none but the sick and indolent will ever say, I am to old to study.

HANCOCK HOUSE. The remainder of the furniture of this public house will be sold this afternoon. The most valuable and desirable still remains, the sale is certainly without reserve, and an opportunity presents to secure articles much less than they can otherwise be obtained. [Read the advertisement.]

HUNTS MERCHANTS MAGAZINE.—A private lette from James William Gilbert, Esq., F. R. S., the general manager of the London and Westminster Bank, to a distinguished commercial gentleman in New York City has a passage touching that world renowned Journal, the Merchants' Magazine, and its editor and proprietor Freeman Hunt, after alluding to the successful manner in which the editor of the Magazine is pursuing his career, continues:—

"Mr. Hunt ought especially to be the man whom the merchants of America delight to honor. It seems strange that we have no similar publication in this country, and yet we have all the raw materials for it in great abundance. We want only a Freeman Hunt."

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. It will be noticed, that a change in the time of running the cars takes place on Monday next, [See advertisement.]

MURDER. A dreadful murder was committed in Ulster, Kingston Co,. New York, on Saturday evening last. Two brothers, named Clearwater, fell into a dispute about driving their team when one knocked the other down with a club and then stabed him, so that he died the next day. The murderer is in jail Rum was at the bottom of the affair.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. At a meeting of the company yesterday, a report was made and unanimously adopted, which places the affairs of the corporation in a far more satisfactory position than was anticipated, and will give a permanent value to the shares.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE. The April number of this monthly magazine has been placed upon our table. It is one of the old established monthlies, and increases in worth as it advances in years. The engravings of the present number, are indeed of great artistic beauty, the reading matter of value and interest and that too from the best writers, and the whole appearance, places this periodical at the head of the literature of the country.

Fetridge & Co., 15 State Street, and 72 and 74 Washington Street Boston, and Caleb Gill & Co,. of this town, are agents for this publication.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLEY MAGAZINE. Two numbers of this periodical have reached us. From a cursory glance, we have formed a high opinion of its value. After a more careful perusal, we shall again refer to it. Fetridge & Co., of Boston, and Caleb Gill & Co., of this town, are the agents.

SHE CARPET BAG. One number of this new paper has been received. Snow & Wilder are the proprietors and publishers, the latter gentleman being an old friend and formerly one of the editorial corps of Norfolk County. It is a spicy and interesting sheet, sure to succeed, and our wish is that the most liberal success may attend it. Send along the second number. More anon.

CHARLES SUMNER AND MRS. PARTINGTON.—The Boston Post says, that the old lady was asking very anxiously of a friend the result of the last Senatorial vote in Massachusetts, and upon being told that Mr. Summer lacked nine votes ot an election, she quitely took a pinch of snuff. All at once her hand was seen to move enegetically to and from her face, and she was heard to say in an under tone, half ruminating and half taking to herself, 'in the nine holes—in the nine holes. Well! he cannot get the game by honors; they don't seem to count now. Well, well! if he gets it at all, it must be by the odd trick; and though in whist this is the best way to win, it is the poorest aud meanest in politics."

The Empire of Russia has commissioned his agents to purchase every model at the World's Exhibition, which may be useful to Russsian manufactures. A letter from St. Petersburgh announces that the Emperor intends to spend some 10,000,000 silver rubles in such purchases.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting. EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES, with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates then is generally charged for novelties,

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit-bearing trees thereby securing correctness of nomenclature

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahilas, and Green-House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and embraces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the proprietor, and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent

POETRY.

LIFE IS SWEET.

"Oh, Life is sweet!" said a merry child;
And I love to roam
In the meadows green, n'eath the sky serene—
Oh! the world is a fairy home,
There are trees hung thick with blossoms fair,
And flowers gay and bright:
There's the moon's clear ray, and the sun-lit bay—
Oh, the world is a world of light!"

"Oh life is sweet!" said a gallani youth,
As he conned the storied page;
And he pondered on the days by-gone,
And the fame of a former age.
There was hope in his bright and beaming eye,
And he longed for riper years;
He clung to life—he dared its strife—
He felt nor dread nor fears.

"Oh, life is sweet!" came merrily
From the lips of a fair young bride;
And a happy smile she gave the while
To the dear one by her side.
"Oh, life is sweet! for we will live
Our constancy to prove;
They sorrows mine, my trials thine,
Our solace is our love."

"Oh, life is sweet!" said a mother fond,
As she gazed on her helpless child;
And she closer press'd to her gladden'd breast
Her babe who unconscious smiled,
"My life shall be for the my child,
Pure, guiltless, as thou art;
And who shall dare my soul to tear
From the tie that forms a part?"

"Oh, life is sweet!" said an aged sire,
Whose eye was sunk and dim;
His form was bent—his strength was spent—
Could life be sweet to him?
Oh, yes; for round the old man's chair
His children's children clung;
And each dear face and warm embrace
Made life seem ever young.

Thus life is sweet, from early youth
To week enfeebled age;
Love twines with life through care and strife,
In every varied stage;
Tho' rough perchance the path we tread,
And dark the sky above,
In every state, there's something yet
To live for and to love.

THE KINGS OF THE SOIL.

Black sin may nestle below a crest,
And crimes below a crown,
As good hearts beat 'neath a fustian vest,
As under a silken gown,
Shall tales be told of the chiefs who sold
Their sinews to crush and kill,
And never a word be sung or heard
Of the men who reap and till?
I bow in thanks to the sturdy throng
Who greet the young morn with toil;
And the burden I give my earnest song
Shall be this—The Kings of the Soil!
Then sing for the Kings who have no crown
But the blue sky o'er their head.—
Never Sultan or Dey had such powers as they,
To withhold or offer bread.

Proud ships may hold both silver and gold,
The wealth of a distant strand;
But ships would rot and be valued not,
Were there none to till the land,
The wildest heath, and the wildest brake.
Are rich as the richest fleet;
For they gladden the wild birds when they wake,
And give them food to eat.
And with willing hand, and spade, and plough,
The gladden hour shall come.
When that which is called the "waste land" now,
Shall sing for the kings who have no crown
Thou sing for the Kings who have no crown
But the blue sky, o'er their head,—
Never Sultan nor Dey had such powers as they,
To withhold or offer bread.

TAKE THE WORLD AS IT IS

Take the world as is! there are good and bad in it,
And good and bad there will be from now to the end;
And they who expect to make saints in a minute,
Are in danger of marring more hearts than they'll mend,
If ye wish to be happy, ne'er seek for the faults,
Or you're sure to find something or other amiss:
Mid much that debases, and much that exalts,
The world's not a bad one if left as it is!

Take the world as it is! if the surface be sinning,
Ne'er stir up the sediment hidden below!
There's wisdom in this, but there's none in repining
O'er things which can rarely be mended, we know!
There's beauty around us, which let us enjoy;
And chide not, unless it may be with a kiss;
Though Earth's not the Heaven we thought when a boy,
There's something to live for, if taken as it is.

Take the world as it is! with its smiles and its sorrow,
Its love and its friendship—its falsehood and truth,
its schemes, that depend on the breath of to-morrow,
Its hopes, which pass by like the dreams of our youth.
Yet oh! whilst the light of affection may shine,
The heart in itself hath a fountain of bliss!
In the worst there's some spark of a nature Divine.
And the wisest and best take the world as it is.

ANECDOTES.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than
SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,
to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated
PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,
swelling the already immense collection to upwards of
HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,
the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely
NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,
ONE HUNDRED FEET in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to
Mock Reality,
and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of

with his Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.
THE PRODIGAL SON,
returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of
THE CRUCIFIXION,
composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.
Christ Disputing with the Doctors;
a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,
in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

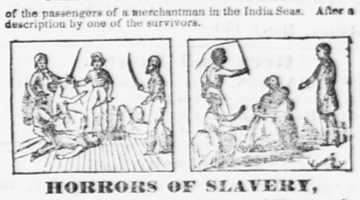
of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.



HORRORS OF SLAVERY,
as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.
MURDER OF MISS McCREA,
by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.
INTEMPERANCE,
and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.
Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of
One Hundred of Cabinet Size,
rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. The entire of the above, and the immense collection of
BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,
obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,
OIL PORTRAITS
of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;
EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,
and ancient Sarcophagi, 3000 Years old; and an entire
Family of Peruvian Mummies;
the DUCK-BILLED PLATYPUS, the connecting link between the BIRD and BEAST, being evidently half each;—the curious half-fish, half-human

FEJEE MERMAID,
which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, in the years 1840, '41, and '42, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;
Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;
ANIMALS and BIRDS of every nation: Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious
SAW AND SWORD FISH,
all in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unequalled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of
TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
In Addition to which, and
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,
visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent
THEATRICAL ENTERTAINMENTS,
given EVERY EVENING, and WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, by a Company of Comedians and an Orchestra of Musicians, admitted to be SUPERIOR to any ever before collected in this country, with the aid of Stage and Scenic Arrangements,
the most grand and superb ever seen in either Europe or America: thus warranting the universal admission that the Boston Museum, besides being the most comfortable and genteel, is also the

'What's bid for a splendid sofa?' he began.

'I'll give you fifteen dollars for it,' said I 'it's not worth more than that, for it's dreadfully abused.'

'Fifteen dollars! only fifteen dollars for this beautiful sofa!' he went on, and a man next to me bid seventeen dollars. I let the auctioneer cry the last bid for a few moments, until I saw he was likely to knock it down.

'Twenty dollars!' said I; and that's as much as I'll go for it.'

The other bidder was deceived by this as to the real value of the sofa, for it did look dreadfully disfigured by the dust and dirt, and consequently the sofa was knocked off to me.

'That was admirably done, indeed,' said Mrs. Courtland, with a bland smile of satisfaction at having obtained the elegant piece of furniture at so cheap a rate. 'And it's so neat a match, too, for the sofa in our front parlor.'

This scene occurred at the residence of a merchant in this city, who was beginning to count his fifty thousand. Let us look on the other side of the picture.

On the day previous to the sale, a widow lady with one daughter, a beautiful and interesting girl about seventeen, was seated on a sofa in a neatly furnished parlor in Hudson street. The mother held in her hand a small piece of paper, on which her eyes were intently fixed; but it could be readily perceived that she saw not the characters that were written upon it.

'What is to be done, ma?' at length asked the daughter.

'Indeed, my child, I cannot tell. The bill is $50, and has been due, you know, for several days. I hav'nt five dollars, and your bill for teaching the Miss Leonard's cannot be presented for two weeks, and then it will not amount to this sum.'

'Can't we sell something more, ma?' suggested the daughter.

'We have sold all our plate and jewelry, and now I'm sure I don't know what we can dispose of, unless it be something that we really want.'

'What do you say to selling the sofa, ma?'

'Well, I don't know, Florence. It don't seem right to part with it. But perhaps we can do without it.'

'It will readily bring fifty dollars, I suppose?'

'Certainly. It is the best wood and workman-ship, and cost one hundred and forty dollars. Your father bought it a short time before he died and that is not more than two years past, you know.'

'I should think it would bring nearly one hundred dollars,' said Florence, who knew nothing of auction sacrifices, 'and that would give us enough besides paying the quarter's rent, to keep us comfortably until some of my bills become due.'

That afternoon, the sofa was sent, and on the next afternoon Florence went to the auctioneer's to receive the money for it.

'Have you sold that sofa, yet?' asked the timid girl, in a low, hesitating voice.

'What sofa, Miss?' asked the clerk looking steadily in her face with a bold stare.

'The sofa sent by Mrs——, sir.'

'When was it to have been sold?'

'Yesterday, sir.'

'Oh, we havn't got the bill made out yet.—You can call the day after to-morrow, and we'll, settle it for you.'

'Can't you settle it to-day, sir? We want the money, particularly.'

Without replying to the timid girl's request the clerk commenced browing over the leaves of the account book, and in a few minutes had taken off the bill of the sofa.

'Here it is—eighteen dollars and sixty cents. See if it is right, and then sign this receipt.'

'Ain't you mistaken, sir? It was a beautiful sofa, and cost one hundred and forty dollars.'

'That's all it brought, Miss, I assure you—furniture sells very badly, now.'

Florence rolled up the bills that were given her, and turned home with a heavy heart.

'It only brought eighteen dollars and sixty cents, ma,' she said, throwing the notes into her mother's lap, and bursting into tears.

'Heaven only knows, then, what we shall do,' said the widow, clasping her hands together, and looking upwards.

There are always two parties in the case of bargains, the gainer and loser, and while the one is delighted with the advantage he has obtained, he thinks nothing of the necessities which have forced the other party to except the highest offer. But few buyers of bargains think or care about taking this view of the subject.

THE UNLUCKY PRESENT.

A Lanarkshire minister (who died within the present century) was one of those unhappy persons, who, to use the words of a well—known Scottish adage, 'can never see green cheese but their een reels.' He was extremely covetous, and not only of the nice articles of food, but of many other things which do not generally excite the cupidity of the human heart. The following story is in corroboration of this assertion:—Being on a visit one day at the house of one of his parishoners, a poor lonely widow, living in a moorland part of the parish, he became fascinated by the charms of a little cast-iron pot, whiched happened at the time to be standing on the hearth, full of potatoes for the poor woman's dinner and that of her children. He had never in his life seen such a nice little pot—it was a perfect conceit of a thing—it was a gem—no pot on earth could match it in symmetry—it was an object altogether perfectly lovely. 'Dear sake! minister!' said the widow, quite overpowered by the reverand man's commendations of her pot; 'if ye like the pot sae weel as a'that, I beg ye'll let me send it to the manse. It's a kind o'orra [superfluous] pot wi' us for we've a bigger and, that we use for ordinair, and that's mair convenient every way for us. Sae ye'll just tak a present o't. I'll send it ower the morn wi' Jamie when he gangs to the schule.' 'Oh!' replied the minister, 'I can by no means permit you to be at so much trouble. Since you are so good as to give me the pot. I'll just carry it home with me in my hand. I'm so much taken with it, indeed, that I would really prefer carrying it myself. After much altercation between the minister and the widow, on this delicate point of politeness, it was agreed that he should carry home the pot himself.

Off then he trudged, bearing this curious little culinarp article, alternately in his hand and under his arm, as seemed most convenient to him. Unfortunately the day was warm, the way long, and the minister fat; so that he became heartily tired of his burden before he got half way home. Under these distressing circumstauces, it struck him, that if, instead of carrying the pot awkwardly at one side of his person, he were to carry it on his head, the burden would be greatly lightened; the principles of natruel phylosophy; which he had learned at college, informing him that when a load presses directly and immediately upon and object, it is far less onerous than when it hangs at the remote end of a lever. Accordingly doffing his hat, which he resolved to carry home in his hand, and having applied his handkerchief to his brow, he clapped the pot, in inverted fashion, upon his head, where, as the reader may suppose, it figured much like Mambrino's helmet upon the crazed capital of Don Quixote, only a great deal more magnificent in shape and dimensions. There was, at first, much relief and much comfort in this new mode of carrying his load; but mark the result. The unfortunate minister having taken a by-path, to escape observation, found himself, when still a good way from home, under the necessity of leaping over a ditch, which intercepted him, in passing from one field to the other. He jumped; but surely no jump was ever taken so completely in, or at least into, the park as this. The concussion given to his person in descending caused the helmet to become a hood; the pot slipped down over his face, and resting with rim upon his neck, stuck fast there, enclosing his whole head as completely as ever that of a new-born child was enclosed by the filmy bag with which nature, as an indication of future good fortune, sometimes invests the noddles of her favorite offspring.—What was the worst of all, the nose, which had permitted the utensil to slip down over it, withstood every desperate attempt, on the part of its proprietor, to make it slip back again; the contracted part, or neck, of the patera, being of such peculiar formation as to cling fast to the base of the nose, although it had found no difficulty in gliding along its hypothenuse. Was ever minister in a worse plight? Was there ever contretems so unlucky? Did ever any man—did ever any minister, so effectually hood-wink himself, or so thouroughly shut his eyes, to the plain light of nature? What was to be done! The place was lonely; the way was difficult and dangerous; human relief was remote, almost beyond reach. It was impossi- even to cry for help; or, if a cry could be uttered, it might reach, in deafening reverberation, the ear of the utterer, but it would not travel twelve inches further in any direction.—To add to the distresses of the case, the unhappy sufferer soon found great difficulty in breathing. What with the heat occasioned by the beating of the sun on the metal, and what with the frequent return of the same heated air to his lungs, he was in the utmost danger of suffocation. Every thing considered, it seemed likely that if he did not chance to be relieved by some accidental wayfarer, there would soon be death in the pot.

The instinctive love of life, however, is omni prevalent; even very stupid people have been found, when put to the push by strong and imminent peril, to exhibit a degree of energy, far above what might have been expected from them, or what they were ever known to exhibit or to exert, under ordinary circumstances. So it was with the pot-enconced minister. Pressed by the urgency of his dillemma, he fortunately reccollected that there was a smith, shop at the distance of about a mile across the fields, where, if he could reach it before the period of suffocation, he might possibly find relief. Deprived of his eyesight, he acted only as a man of feeling, and went on as cautiously as he could, with his hat in his hand. Half crawling and half sliding over ridge and furrow, ditch and hedge, somewhat like Satan floundering over chaos, the unhappy minister traveled with all possible speed, as nearly as he could guess the direction of the place of refuge. I leave it to the reader to concieve the surprise, the mirth, the infinite amusement of the smith and all the hangers on of the smiddy, when at length, torn and worn, faint and exhausted, blind and breathless, the unfortunate man arrived at the place and let them know [rather by signs than by words] the circumstance of his case. In the words of an old Scottish song.

"Out came the gudeman, and high he shouted;
Out came the gudewife, and low she louted;
And a' the town neighbors were gathered about it;
And there was he, I trow."

The merriment of the company, however, soon gave way to considerations of humanity. Ludicrous as was the minister, with such an object where his head should have been, and with the feet of the pot pointing upwards, like the horns of the great Enemy, it was nevertheless necessary that he should be speedily restored to his ordinary condition, if it were for no other reason than that he might continue to live. He was accordingly, at his own request, led into the smithy, multitudes flocking around to tender him their kindest offices, or to witness the process of release; and having laid down his head upon the anvil, the smith lost no time in seizing and poising his goodly forehammer:—'Will I come sair on, minister?' exclaimed the considerate man of iron, in at the brink of the pot. 'As sair as ye like,' was the minister's answer; 'better a' obap i' the chafts than die for want of breath.' Thus permitted, the man let fall a blow, which fortunately broke the pot in pieces, without hurting the head it contained, as the cook-maid breaks the shell of a lobster, wiihout bruising the delicate food within. A few minutes of the slear air, and a glass from the guidewife's bottle restored the unfortunate man of prayer: but, assuredly, the incident is one which will long live in the memory of the parishoners of C——[Exchange Paper.

A DOMESTIC MAN.

'Wife, my handkerchief! give me my handkerchief! It ought to be on the arm chair in the middle window.'

The lady invoked came out of her dressing-room, and gave the handkerchief to her husband, who had not yet risen. Ere applying it to his face, he paused, and began to examine it closely.

'This is not mine; my handkerchiefs have no colored borders; 'tis yours, Caroline.'

'Very possibly, my dear.'

'Yes, it must be yours; but then your handkerchiefs have blue borders, and this is brown; what is the meaning of that?'

'It means, I suppose, that I have also handkerchiefs with brown borders.'

'Really? how long have you had them?'

'Since I bought them.'

'But you never told me that you had bought them.'

'Really, I did not think it necessary to do so. Am I never to purchase the samllest article without asking your permission?'

'No no, I did not mean that, but you see it was natural that I should be surprised at finding a handkerchief with a brown border.'

Monsieur then got up, and nearly dressed, looked for his slippers?'

He could not find them, and rang for a servant.

'Jeannette, where are my slpipers?'

'Here monsieur'—pointing to the floor at the foot of the bed.

'There! And why did you put them there? that their usual place, I ask you?'

'I don't know, monsieur.'

'Stupid! Under that arm-chair, near the chimney, is their proper position. Remember that in future, nothing must be out of place in my house.'

Breakfast was served. Madame read the newspaper whilst she drank her coffee, and monsieur knelt down and toasted some bread before the fire presently he said 'Caroline, did you put a log of wood on the fire last night after I went to bed?'

'A log, my dear! I don't know; what are you saying?'

'One would suppose I asked you the question in Hebrew! When I left the room last night, at ten o'clock, there were two logs on the fire—quite sufficient to last for the remainder of the evening. I don't want to hinder you having a blazing fire if you feel cold; but you ought to tell me how much wood you put down for now I see the burned end of three logs; and how could there be three if you had not put on another?'

'Really, Antoine, you bore me to death with your logs! I am sure I never remarked whether wood was on or not. I am reading a most interesting paragraph, and you interrupt me to ask me about a morsel of wood!'

Monsieur was silent; but he whistled an opera tune between his teeth, which he always did when not well pleased. After eating for some minutes, he began—'This milk is not good; there is very little cream on it, and I don't think the milkwoman gives just measure. The pan ought to hold a certain quantity, and then we should know. Have they a pan on purpose for the milk?'

No answer. Caroline continued to read.

'Don't you think I am right? By having always the same measure, we could tell whether we got the proper quantity in the pan.'

'Yes! yes! we will get a pan—ten pans if you like—only let me read in pesce!'

'I did not say ten; I said one; it will not cost much. I know a place where I can buy a very nice one for twelve sous. Ah! this butter is not good. How much do you pay for it, Caroline?'

'I don't know.'

'How is that?'

'Jeannette buys it.'

'But I presume you look at her bills?'

'Oh certainly. Now I recollet—tho price is thirty sous.'

'Jeannette—Jeannette.'

The maid appeared, with her mouth full of something she was eating.

'What's the price of this butter, Jeannette?'

'Thirty sous, monsieur.'

'The pound?'

'Yes, monsieur.!

'Much too dear. I ate some the day before yesterday, when I breakfasted with one of my friends, which was far better than this, and cost but twenty -seven sous.

'Then monsieur asked his friend to tell him the price.'

'Of course, why not?'

Jeannette was retiring, but her master stopped her.

'Ah was not there some of the beef remaining that was dressed on Tuesday?'

'It was finished long ago, Monsieur.'

The maid retired and her master muttered to himself, 'I think some of the beef ought to be there still'

When the time comes for sweeping the sitting rooms, Monsieur contrives to be always in the way of the broom, watching least the servant should leave any dust in the corners.

The girl, who does not approve of this supervision, manages adroitly to sweep the crumbs, &c. into her master's shoes, and to fill his eyes with fine dust.

When monsieur is going to walk our with his wife, he examines and criticises every part of her toilet.

'Are you going to put on that gown?'

'Yes my dear.'

'It fits you very badly. I see you are taking your lilac bonnet.'

'Certainly. Is it not pretty?'

'Tolerably. But I don't like the flowers in the border. Why have you taken the lace of your visete.'

'Because it was too handsome for the visete which is now growing shabby.'

'I assure you it looked very well with the lace.'

To please her figity husband, poor Caroline was obliged to recommence her toilette, and it ended in her becoming so confused and tired, that she refused to go out all that day.

One morning she told Antoine that she wanted to purchase two or three summer dresses. He did not reply, but the next day he brought her three pieces of some gaudy manufacture, saying triumphantly as he presented them, 'am I not a polite and attentive husband.'

Caroline feigned to be pleased, in order not to disappoint her husband, but the dresses were by no means to her taste; and they had cost considerable more money than she would have given for pretty ones.

Regularly before dinner our busy man of the house, made it a rule to go into the kitchen and take an affectionate survey of the spits, stewpans, pots and saucepans with their contents. He would then call the cook—'what is this Matha?'

"A fricasse of chicken, monsieur.'

'Are they mushroons in it?'

'Certainly, monsieur.'

'Very odd, I can't see them! Ah, yes there they are. Have we vegetable soup to-day.'

'Yes, monsieur; here it is.'

'I see. But you put too many carrots; how many are they in this soup?'

'Ma foi! monsieur, how can I remember? do you think I reckon the carrots I put in?'

'You ought to do so. I'll venture to say there are at least six in that pot; and monsieur stoops gravely over the steaming soup, and tries with very indifferent success, to count the vegetables; while the angry Martha feels greatly inclined to pin a dishcloth to her master's coat.

During dinner monsieur peevish prying comments are so numerous as to defy reputation; but on this occasion he ended by reproving his wife for fastening her napkin to her dress with one pin instead of two.

In the evening some company arrived, and monsieur scolded Jeannette because two of the gentlemen forgot to dust their shoes on the mat. He then went to supperintend the eau sucree, and afterwards ran to assist in taking of a lady's bonnet and shawl, saying, 'I'll put them in a safe place for you, madame; when you are going home, ask me for them, and I'll get them for you!'

It happened, unluckly, that monsieur, in his anxiety to do things better than any one but his favorite cat; and when the lady was going away, she discoved, to her horror, that her beautiful cashmere and delicate satin bonnet had been converted into a very comfostable cradle by Madame Puss for the accomodation of five interesting little strangers, who had made their appearance during the last hour!

Before retiring to rest, our domestic man always visited every room in the house, to see that all was right, and every candle extinguished.

Servants seldom stay long in the house of a 'domestic man;' they ask for their wages, and go away; but as his wife cannot follow their example, it becomes hert ruest wisdom to bear with his faifings, and to seek by gentle influence to lead his mind towards loftier and more dignified pursuits than that of prying into the the details of domestic management.

BROILING A LOBSTER.

Mr. Smith's appetite sometimes takes an epicurean turn, and then we indulge in a lobster, calf-head soup, terrapins, or something of that sort.

Once upon a time, he sent home a lobster.—I did not feel very well that day, and concluded to leave the cooking of the animal to a new girl that I had taken a week or two before, on a strong recomendation. She claimed to be a finished cook, and her testimonials were distinct on that head.

'Kitty,' said I 'Mr. Smith has sent home a lobster, I believe?'

I had summoned the girl to my room.

'Yes, ma'am,' she replied, 'Is it for dinner?'

'Of course it is, and you must see that it is well cooked.'

Kitty lingering a few moments, as if not entirely satisfied about something, and then retired to the kitchen.

'I wonder if she knows how to boil a lobster?' said I to myself.

But then the remembrance that she had come to me as a finished cook, crossed my mind, and I answered, mentally, my own questions by saying:

'Of course she does.'

Not long afterwards, I went to the dining-room which was over the kitchen. I had been there only a little while, when I heard an unusual noise below, followed by an exclamation from Kitty—

'O! murderation! I can't cook the straddling thing. I wonder what Mr. Smith brought it home alive for!'

I was, of course, all attention now, and going to the top of the stairs, stood listening to what was going on below.

'There now. Lie still!' I heard Kitty say. This was followed by rattling of tongs, or some other iron implements, and a rapid shuffling of feet.

Curious to know what was going on, I stepped lightly down the stairs, and through the open door had a full view of both Kitty and the lobster.

Live coals had been raked out upon the hearth. Over these was placed a gridiron, and on this not very comfortable bed Kitty was endeavoring to force Mr. Lobster to lie still and be cooked. But this he was by no means inclined to do; and no sooner did he place him on the heated bars, than he made his way off in the quickest possible time. Then she caught hold of him with the tongs, restored him to his proper position on the gridiron, and with poker and tongs strove to hold him there.

As the lobster, a second and a third time, struggled free of Kitty's tongs and poker, I could no longer restrain myself, but burst forth into a loud fit of laughter. By the time this subsided, his lobstership was in the middle of the kitchen door. Picking him up, I threw him into a pot of boiling water, and then retreated from the kitchen, so convulsed with laughter that I could not utter a word.

Kitty did not soon hear the last of her attempt to broil a lobster. Home Gazette.

WHITE'S BONNET ROOMS.

The following description of Whites Bonnet Rooms we take from the Boston Daily Bee.

We yesterday paid a visit to this well known establishment, and were gratified at the extent, the beauty, the neatness, and the system of everything about the place. We do not hesitate to pronounce it edual to any establishment of the kind in the metropolis—and of course in all New England. This somewhat strong assertion the public will find more than verified by a visit to the rooms.

The establishment is divided into six department, all of which have a special and separate design. The first is the.

Main Sale Room.—This is a large apartment measuring 60 by 30 feet, and at once one of the most elegant, airy, light, convenient and pleasant rooms we have ever seen. It has recently been entirely refitted in the most exquisite style, and its large and splendid mirrors, its richly ornamented oval ceiling, its rich and luxuriant sofas, its paintings and engravings, and its general furnishings represent a high order of taste, equally chaste and removed from extravagance. All is neat, harmonious, in keeping, and appropriate. In this department are sold straws, ribbons, flowers, &c., of which the largest, freshest, and most tasty assortments may invariably be found. The amount of business done here is immense. Even at this early period of the season we found it thronged with patrons eagerly searching for the beautiful in fashion.

The North Saloon is 30 by 30 feet, and is also exquisitely neat.

This department is intended exclusively for the display and sale of Silk Millinary. It will be opened on the 1st of May, at which time one of the most brilliant and varied assortment of bonnets will be displayed which has ever been seen in Boston. Ladies will please keep their best eye and ear on this fact.

The Third Department is a sort of Ante-room to the North Saloon. In it are displayed a variety of bonnets for those who wish to purchase before the full blushing of the season.

The Mourning Saloon is at once a novel, a convenient, and an exceedingly appropriate department. We were especialy pleased with this section of the establishment. It is finished and appointanced in the table hues of mourning, and everything is impressively stamped with the spirit and design of the room. The visitor should see it

In it is a good assortment of mourning apparel. A large stock is not kept on hand, but such are the facilities of the establishment that at an unprecedentedly short notice mourning apparel can be supplied.

The Work Department deserves especial note. It is in size 40 by 50 feet, and arranged in a most model order. Every convenience is had to carry on the manufacturing of bonnets. Some seventy-five girls being present we did not risk any more than a view from the entrance to this department. Our experience in these matters has taught us so nething—it isn't particular what.

Adjoining the Work Room is the apartment where the goods are placed before they go into the formes department—a sort of half-way station between the main Sales Room and the Work Room.

At the head of the Work Department is Mrs. A. G. Dawes, a lady of superior and acknowledged taste in all millinary matters. She has now filled this very important post for ten years.

Of the proprietors we need say but little.—They are well known to the public. Mr. J. L. Crosby is a gentleman whose taste in the selection of goods has been the household theme of the Boston ladies for the last fifteen years. Of Mr. James W. Coverly, who has been in the establishment for the last eight years, it is almost equally unnecessary to say a word. His great business capacity, his affability, courtesy, and gentlemenly bualties generally are noticed and complimented by all who visit the Saloons.

We would earnestly suggest to our many lady readers to call at White's Bonnet Rooms, 39 and 45 Hanover Street, and see if we have not said 'the proper thing' of the establishment. They will be received with politeness, and if they wish to purchase we will guarantee good bargains, good goods and good fashions.

ADVERTISING.

He is a shrewd man who advertises. This is proverbial, the world over. It is simply putting your goods, wares, merits, plans, suggestions, bargains, &c., into the eyes of the universal public. Every body reads the newspapers now-a-days. A good advertisement is like taking every man and woman in society by the vest, button-hole or arm, and privately whispering to them important matters.

Who are they that succeed in business? The one who stirs up the public, or those who make no more noise than a church-mouse? Of course the former. The man of enterprise and intelligence always puts himself and his merits straight before the public eye, and keeps them there. It's the only way to make mony, get a reputation, or be anybody. QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12th, 1851.

John A. Green, Editor.

APPOINTMENT. Horatio Pratt, Esq., of Taunton has received from the Governor and Council the appointment of District Attorney for the Southern District, in place of Hon. H. G. O. Colby of New Bedford, removed.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. Changes follow changes in such rapid succession on this Railroad, that, it is almost impossible to keep the trace of them.—Last week we announced an alteration in the time of running the cars, and now we have to notice the retirement of J. A. Sampson as one of the Conductors. This gentleman commenced with the opening of the road in the same capacity which he has retained to the time of his withdrawal. By his courteous deportment, kind attentions, affability, and gentlemanly conduct, he has won the love and respect of all who have enjoyed a few hours journey with him. We understand, that Mr. Sampson shortly assumes the duties of Wharfinger, on T. Wharf, in Boston.

P. S. It is alone understood, that Mr. A. H. Moore who has also been a Conductor from the opening of the road, retreats from his office; and like Mr. Sampson warmly receives the thanks of all who have enjoyed his kindness and attentions.

ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

The adjournment of the annual March meeting took place on Monday last of which William S. Morton, Esq., was Moderator, and the following business transacted:—

Register of Deeds.—Enos Foord of Dedham, received sixteen ballots, being the whole number cast.

County Treasurer.—John Bullard of Dedham, received twenty-two votes, all that was given.

Pound Keeper.—Samuel S. Pickering.

Collector of Taxes.—John Hardwick—he agreeing to collect for one cent and one mill on the dollar—with the same regulations as to payment and discount on taxes as have been adopted for several past years.

The Report of the Select Committee on the establishment of a High School was accepted. [We shall endeavor to publish this document, in season, gratuitously.] Further action was had on this subject, George Newcomb, Esq., having introduced a motion which was adopted—that the General School Committee procure a plan, estimates, and select a location, to be used for a High and other schools, and report their doings to the Town at a special meeting called as soon as their labors may be completed; and also cause such articles to be inserted in the warrant as will answer the whole subject of a High School, Building, etc.

William B. Duggan, Esq., of the North District was added to the above Committee.

Voted.—On motion of E. W. Marsh, that the Prudential Committees of the Centre, South and West School Districts be authorized to provide an additional School Room, if needed, and to draw on the Treasurer for an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars for each above named districts.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended the Town to raise the following sums—

For the support of Schools,	4925
" " " " Poor and Highways	2200
" " pay of Town Officers	625
" collecting, premiums and abatement on Taxes	900
" repairs on Town buildings, and expenses in the several School districts	500
For interest on Town debt	550
" miscellaneous	800
" engine expenses	500
" part payment of Town debt	4000
	$15000

This report was amended by adding $75 for the support of Schools, and an addition of $2000 for the purposes of a High School was also voted, making the whole sum to be raised this year for Town purposes $17,075

The distribution of the money for School purposes was placed in the hands of the General School Committee.

The Selectmen's report on the revision of the Jury Box, submitting the following named gentlemen, was accepted, viz:—

"ELEGANT DRY GOODS ESTABLISHMENT. We would call the attention of our readers to the Advertisement of Messrs. Chandler & Co., Boston, in this paper. The following notice of their Store, we cut from the Boston Evening Journal;—

The beautiful store of Messrs Chandler & Co. Summer st., acknowledged by all to be one of the most elegant in the country, is now filled with a rich and handsome assortment of goods, admirably corresponding with the beauty of the ware-rooms in which they are exhibited, and both are attracting the notice and admiration of citizens and strangers. The good taste and judgment displayed in the selection and arrangement of this large and valuable stock, and the promptness, regularity and fairness with which the business of this extensive concern is managed, reflects great credit upon its proprietors, and cannot fail of being approved and duly appreciated by the public.

We think it may be truly said, that this house now ranks among the first in their line of business, in the United States, not only in the extent of their business, but in the systematic and honorable manner in which it is conducted."

QUINCY.—Norfolk County is the fifth in the State in valuation. Quincy is the fifth town in the County in valuation and the fourth in population. With the five adjacent towns Dorchester, Milton, Braintree Weymouth and Randolph, the described area contains a population of 27,322 persons, which deducting that part of Roxbury it is proposed to annex to Boston, is about 44 per cent of the number of inhabitants the county would contain after such annexation—and the valuation of the towns, enumerated, is more than fifteen millions dollars and nearly equal in amount to the valuation of the whole county in 1840, and lacking but four per cent of being one third of the valuation of the whole county as it now is. Quincy within the last ten years has increased its population, lacking six persons only, fifty per cent, and has more than doubled its valuation. It now contains by the State census from which these facts are mainly obtained 4958 inhabitants and its valuation is 2,085,525 dollars.

A rich miser, in Auburn, New York, is to be buried in Owasco Lake a beautiful sheet of water near that town. He has a stone, coffin made, which takes twelve yoke of oxen to draw it. He gives a man a nice farm for burying him. He is to take him into the middle of the lake, and sink him.

A good book and a good wife are the two best companions in the world; a brandy bottle and a pack of cards are about the worst.

The Austrian Minister of Commerce has issued an order that every railway train carrying passengers shall be provided with a portable medicine chest and all necessary instruments to give assistance to persons who may meet with accident.

The United States Army, in the last sixty-five years, it is estimated, on the authority of official document, that our military establishments have subjected us to an expense of at least $950,000,000.

There are twenty two thousand miles of telegraph in operation in the United States, nearly enough to reach round the globe!

The Secretary of War has ordered that several companies of United States Flying Artillery be forthwith disbanded. Many other troops will be disbanded. No means were provided by Congress to move the troops to the frontier, where alone they are wanted, and subsist them there. Hence the necessity for these orders, notwithstanding the most necessitous demands are coming up from Texas, New Mexico, and California, for troops to protect the people from Indian outrages.

The reward of ten thousand offered by the Legislature of this State for the discovery of a cure for the potato rot, has been claimed by Mr. Joshua F. Hatch, of Dorchester. His remedy consists of ground charcoal mixed with sulphate of lime.

Comodore Alexander S. Wardsworth, of the United States Navy, whose death in Washington city, has been announced was 68 years of age, and was the eighth on the roll of Captains in the Navy (the whole number being sixty-eight.)—He entered the service from the State of Maine, in April, 1804.

Fanny Elssler is now in Moscow. She has recently sold nearly all of her diamonds for the sum of 60,000 thalers—about 75,000 dollars.

Double eagles, to the value of more than twenty-three millions of dollars, have been coined the past year.

The hardest thing in this world to hold, is an unruly tongue. It beats a hot iron and a kicking horse.

The Richmond Whig says there is but twenty dollars in the Treasury of Vergnia, and calls upon the Banks to assist the Commonwealth in her present difficulties.

A man has been arrested in Philadelphia for stealing a basket worth twenty five cents, and died in a cell of the prison—the prosecutor refusing to release him.

The marble palace of Stewart, in New York, for the sale of dry goods, valued on the Assessor's book of the Sixth Ward, for this year, at two hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

The editor of the Oswego Journal, Winthrop Atwill, has received a present of a handsome font of type, by the friends of the temperance reform in that city.

The Prince of Wales is of age from his birth, and a chair of state is placed for him on the right of the throne in the House of Lords. The present Prince is the ninth who has received the title in infancy.

The quantity of type for the printing of the catalogues for the exhibition, amounted to a weight of fortyone thousand pounds. The casting of this large quantity of type, gave employment to two hundred and fifty persons for ten weeks.

The die for the three cent piece, authorized by the late Congress, is now ready. Preparations are making for a large issue of this coin from the mint at an early day.

A gentleman who was determined to outdo the horticulturist who raised chickens from egg-plants, has succeeded in producing a colt from a horse-chesnut and a calf from a cow-ard.

A New Democratic Paper, to take the place of the defunct Globe, is about to be started in New York City. It is to be under the management of Mr. Casper C. Childs.

Four yoke of fat cattle were exhibited a day or two ago in New Haven, (Conn.) the respective weights of which were as follows: 1st yoke, 4220 pounds; 2d, 3,935 pounds; 3d, 3,690 pounds; 4th 3,340 pounds, making a total of 15,175 pounds.—The weight of the heaviest animal was 2,110, that of the smallest 1,645 pounds.

If the American postage on letters for the British provinces, whether intended to be sent by United States mails or the British steamers, be not prepaid, such letters are fowarded to the appropriate frontier post-office, where they, if not called for, become dead, and in due course are forwarded to the dead letter office. Letters for the West Indies, Chagres, and Panama, if the postage be not pre-paid are forwarded by sailing vessels only, and the same is true in regard to newspapers in both cases.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting. EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates than is generally charged for novelties.

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit bearing trees thereby securing correctness of nomenclature.

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahlias, and Green House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and embraces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the proprietor and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent.

Address,—"The Superintendant of the Nurseries, at Hawthorn Grove, Dorchester, Mass.," or the care of the subscriber, No. 2 Pearl street, Boston.

POETRY.

THE WAY TO BE HAPPY.

Some think it hardship to work for their bread.
Although for our good it was ment;
Bnt those that don't work have no right to be fed,
And the idle are never content.

An honest employment brings pleasure and gain,
And makes us our troubles forget;
For those who work hard have no cause to complain
And 'tis better to labor than fret.

And if we had riches they could not procure
A happy and peaceable mind;
Rich people have trouble as well as the poor,
Although of a different kind.

It signifies not what our stations have been,
Nor wether we're little or great;
For happiness lies in the temper within,
And not in the outward estate.

We only need labor as well as we can
For all that our bodies may need,
Still doing our duty to God and to man,
And we shall be happy indeed.

SONG OF THE EDITOR.

Dedicated to his Dilinquent Patrons.

Air—"Then you ll remember me."

When other bills and other duns
Their tale of woe shall tell,
Of notes in bank, without "the funds,"
And cotton hard to sell;
There may, perhaps, in such a scene
Some recollection be
Of bills that longer due have been,
And you'll remember me!

When "hard up" customers shall wring
Your heart with hopes in vain,
And deem it but a trifling thing
To tell you "call again,"
When calling proves a useless task,
Without the "lawyer's fee,"
In such a moment I but ask
That you ll remember me.

THE POOR MAN TO HIS SON.

Work, work, my boy, be not afraid,
Look labor boldly in the face:
Take up the hammer or the space,
And blush not for your humble place.

Hold up your brow in honest pride,
Though rough and swarth you hands may be Such hands are sap veins that provide
The life blood of the Nation's free.

There's honor in the toiling part,
That finds us in the furrowed fields;
It stamps a crest upon the heart
Worth more than all your quarter shields.

Work, work, my boy, and murmer not,
The fustain garb betrys no shame;
The grime of forge soot leaves no blot,
And labor gilds the meanest name.

A man is never half so blest
As when the busy day is spent,
So as to make his evening rest
A holiday of glad content.

God grant thee but a due reward,
A guerdon portion far and just,
And then ne'er think thy station hard,
But work, my boy, work, hope, and trust?

ALL THAT'S BRIGHT MUST FADE!

In beautiful ringlets, her dark auburn hair
Fell over a neck than marble more fair;
Ah! yes it was!
The luxurious bloom of her soseate mouth
Was finer than nectarines, raised at the south;
I guess it was!

Bewitching, the light that dwelt in her eyes!
And blacker than any old raven that flies,
Or jet, they were
The radiant glances her lovers beguile;
And crowds of them, wooing, were seeking he smile;
I'll bet they were!

I told of my love, begged her to speak,
And one glowing kiss I pressed on her cheek;
She fainted.
The color had fled from a circular spot;
I thought it was nature; alas! it was not;
She painted.

ANECDOTES.

A wealthy but rather penurious old gentleman got hold of a rather tough customer in the person of a railroad and steamboat runner, whom he had offended by some act of meanness. "Blast your stingy old skin!" said the runner to him, before a whole depot full of by standers; "I knew you when you used to hire your children, to go to bed without their supper, and after they got to sleep you'd go up and steal their pennies to hire 'em with 'em again next night." This was a little too much and the old miser "slopped" amiost the laughter of the assemblage.

A certain lady who had been famed for sour looks and not very sweet words, touching the various incipents of life was observed to have suddenly become very amiable.

"What happy change has come over you?" said a neighbor.

"Why," said the transformed, "to tell you the truth, I have been all my life striving for a contented mind, and I've finally made up my mind to sit down contented without it."

Melancthon was reproached by some one with changing his views. "Do you think, sir," replied he, "that I have been studying assiduously for thirty years without having learned anything?"

THE BLUES.

One of the direst misfortunes which fall a man, among the thousand ills which is heir to, is a predisposition to melancholy. What are the causes of this tendency in certain individuals, is often a puzzling question to decide; nor has old Burton, with all his acuteness and produgality of learning, cleared up all the mysteries of the subject. Whether body or mind, probably, are exclusively concerned in the matter, but each acts and reacts upon the other. Generally speaking, when you are troubled with the blue devils, and cannot tell why, you may be certain it springs from physical weakness. The best course to be done by vigerous muscular exercise. The blood of a melancholy man is thick and sluggish, moving sluggishly in the veins like mud-waters in a canal; the blood of your merry, cheering philosopher is clear and quick—like newly broached champagne. Try, then, to set your blood in motion. To effect this, don't go to guzzling down brandy-smashers, sherry-cobblers, and gin-cocktails or any of the thousand compeunds in which alcohol is disguised; for every artificial stimulus will drag you down two degrees, where it lifts you up one. The devil always beats us at a barter." Try, then, what a smart walk will do for you: set your pegs in motion on rough, rocky ground, and carry them up a steep, craged hill; bonnet a stone wall; swing an axe over a pile of hickory or rock maple; turn a grindstone; dig deep; practice "ground and lofty tumbling;" pump water in sieves with the Danaides, or roll like Sisyphus "up the hill side heave a huge round stone;" in short, do anything that will bring the perspiration, and you will soon find you have your "brains lined with black," as Burton says, or to rise in the morning, as Cowley says, like an infernal frog out of Acheron. Instead of with the ooze and mud of melancholy, as said of De Quincey, that he fancies he has a living hippopotamus, or some other "unclean creature" in his stomach; and the only way he finds for this and similar effects of opium is to walk with all his might ten miles a day, and if it rains, to lug a pile of stones from one point to another. Plato thought so highly of exercise, that he pronounced it a cure for a wounded conscience, and Philips, in his "Cider on the Spleen" says sentimentuously.

Fling but a stone the giant dies.

As for bad weather, don't become a victim to it—for it will rule like a tyrant. There is no man so pitiable, as he who has a constitution servile to every skyey influence—who is at the mercy of barometrical changes, weather-cocks, shall be wretched or happy. It is but the rising or falling of the mercury that makes or mars a man poor as a begger, or rich as Rothschild, as valid as Cæsar, or cowardly as Falstaff. Treat the weather, as Goldsmith advises you to handle the needle just as far as you are fascinate with it, it will torment you; but,

Grasp it like a man of mettle
And the rogue obeys your will.

In conclusion, whatever your misfortunes or trials, do not give up the devils—don't despair "have the on the hip." Are you at the bottom of Fortunes wheal!—every change must be for the better, and the next wheel may bring you to the top. Remember what Ovid says—

Non, si male nune,
Et olim sic erit.

Are you cursed with a rickety constitution and do you look thin as a lath that has been split with the carpenter, and a fall out with a plosterer, as Tom Hood says. "So much the better; remember how the smugglers hide the sails of the lugger to escape the notice of the cutter. Turn your edge to the old enemy, mayhap he won't see you?" Above

"So much the better; remember how the smugglers trim the sails of the lugger to escape the notice of the cutter. Turn your edge to the old enemy, and maybap he won't see you?" Above all, keep up a stout heart and you'll still save the crazy vessel from drifting on a lee shore, or foundering on the rocks.—Don't fancy, because you have a stitch in you side, that you are nearly 'sewed up,' nor, because you look a little pale, that you are about to kick the bucket. Don't imagine either because you are consumptive at your meals, that you have got the consumption; nor, every time that you cough, that you are going to coughypot. Be not "over-exquisite to cast the fashions of udcertain evils," for despondency in a nice case is the overweight that may turn the scale, and make you kick the beam and the bucket both at once.—Go to the Museum, have a good laugh, now and then; read witty things; and let you lungs 'crow like chanticleer,' and as much like a game-cock as possible. 'A bounded mirth,' says quaint Fellham, 'is a patent, adding time and happiness to the crazed life of a man. There is nothing like a guffaw to trighten the blue devils; it puts the whole of them to flight, be they Prusian blue, or indigo, powder blue or ultramarine. Eastly, in the pithy language of Bacon, 'avoid envy, anger-getting inwards, subtile and knotty inquisitions; joys and exhilarations in excess; sadness not communicated; entertain hopes, mirth rather than surfeit of them; studies that fill the mind with splendid and illustrous objects, as histories, fables, contemplations of nature—"and you will be able to starve off the foul fiend of melancholy, or to exercise him when has passed you, better than with all the prescriptions of Caryssippus or Crantor.—Yankee Blade.

A GENTLEMAN.

'Be very gentle with her, my son,' said Mrs. Butler, as she tied on her little girl's bonnet, and sent her out to play with her elder brother.

They had not been out very long before a cry was heard, and presently Julius came in and threw down his hat, saying:

'I hate playing with girls! There's no fun with them; they cry in a minute.'

'What have you been doing to your sister? I see her lying there on the gravel walk; you have torn her frock and pushed her down. I am afraid you forgot my caution to be gentle.'

'Gentle! Boys can't be gentle, mother; it their nature to be rough, and hardy, and boisterous. They are the stuff soldiers and salors are made of. Its very well to talk of a gentle girl; but a gentle boy—it sounds ridiculous! I should be ready to knock a fellow down for calling me so!'

'And yet, Julius, a few years henee, you would be very angry if any one were to say you were not a gentleman.'

'A gentle man. I had never thought of dividing the word that way before. Being gentle always seems to me like being week and womanish.'

This is so far from being the case, my son, that you will always find the bravest men are the most gentle. The spirit of chivalry that you so much admire, was a spirit of the noblest courage and the utmost gentleness combined. Stil I dare say you would rather be called a manly than a gentle boy?'

'Yes, indeed, mother.'

Well then my son, it is my great wish that you should endeavor to unite the two. Show yourself manly when you are exposed to danger or see others in peril; be manly when called on to speak the truth, though the speaking of it may bring reproach upon you; be manly when you are in sickness and pain. At the same time be gentle, whether you be with females or with men; be gentle towards all men. By putting the two spirits together, you will deserve a name which perhaps you will not so greatly objeet to.'

'I see what you mean, dear mother, and will endaavor to be what you wish—a gentlemanly boy.'

TBE TWO EXTREMES.

There is a striking resemblance in many points betwixt the North American savage and the highest orders of aristocracy in Europe. The savage despises labor; so does the high born aristocrat. The savage is a great hunter, so is the aristourat. The savage is exclusively fond of trinkets and finery; so is the aristocrat. The savage paints his face so does the aristocrat. The savage imperturble; he never suffers it to appear that admires or is astonished, or is affected at anything, and insensibility is his point of honor; so with the aristocrat. The savage sells his daughter for beaver robes and buffalo skins; the aristocrat for rank, title, and money; and finally the savage looks down with contempt on all those who subsist by the labor of there hands, and the sweet of their brow. There are many other points of resemblance proving the truth of the old maxim that "The two extremes are nearer to each other than the middle."

BY REQUEST SCHOOL COMMITTEE

The Committee chosen by the Town at their annual March meeting to take into consideration the whole subject of the establishment of a High School and to see if a building should be erected for that purpose, have attended to the duties assigned them and submit the following:—

Upon an examination of the law found upon our Statute Book requiring a High School in certain Towns, it will be found that our Town is among the number that possesses all the elements to make it obligatory on them to establish a Public High School. Quincy we trust would be found among the last to bid defiance to any law enacted by our State Legislature; but more especially a law that has for its object the encouragement of education among us. The law as it now stands upon the Statute Book requires that every Town, containing four thousand inhabitants shall maintain a school at such convenient places or alternately at such places in the Town, as they shall determine for the benefit of all the inhabitants, to be kept by a master who shall be competent to teach Book-keeping, Surveying, Geometry, Algebra, History of the United states, and general history, Latin, Greek, Rhetoric, and Logic; making in all ten additional studies to what are now required to be taught in our Grammar Schools. The penalty for not complying with this law where the requsite number of inhabitants are found in any Town, is double the amount of money ever raised for the support of schools in said Town. An act was passed in 1840 relesing, towns having four thousand inhabitants from the obligation of maintaining a High School, provided they raise twenty five per cent more money than the highest sum ever raised by said Town. The late Secretary of the Board of Education (Hon. Horace Mann,) the father of the present common School system, declares this to be the first act in school Legislation that has had a tendency to retard the cause of education. This act was repealed however in 1848, and remained unchanged til 1850, when another slight modification was made without affecting materially the original law as it stood prior to 1840. It appears then that the only question that can arise, is as to the manner in which the law shall be carried out. Two ways have been proposed to carry out the provisions of the Statute; which are the following, Viz. First to establish a single High School located at such place as the Town shall direct. Second to make six High Schools of our Grammar schools embracing all the elements of both Grammar and High Schools. Let it be borne in mind that such a High School as the Statute requires must be kept for the benefit of the inhabitants of all the Town, and no power will exist to prevent any scholar possessing the requisite qualifications for entering the High School, from going to any school in Town kept as a High School, consequently great confusion and inconvenience may follow; as one School would be liable from various causes to be overrun, which others might be reduced to a number altogether too small. Another reason we would offer for not substituting the Grammar for the High School is that it would have a tendency to insure the grammer School we think seriously; while we should reap none of the benefits to be derived from a single High School. Our Grammar Schools in addition to their very crowded state at the present time, have, many of them, a greater number of studies than can well be attended to: What an incongurous mass would they present, not only with an additional number of scholars, but also the ten additional branches required tobe taught in a High School.

It must be apparent to every one with a moments reflection that this cannot be done without manifest injustice to all our Grammar Schools. In striving to raise them we should lower them to a standard far below their present condition. Let us now consider some of the advantages to be derived from the establishment of a single High School. But before entering upon that part of our duty, your committee, in order that the Town may be placed in the best position to receive the greatest amount of good from a High School, would suggest some changes that might be made in relation to our present Schools. It is believed by many of our most zealous and philanthorpic friends of education, that our present districting system has had a tendency to retard the progress of common School education, to a greater or less extent in most of our Towns. It has been considered an evil which has been suffered far too long, when the remedy was so near at hand, and so easily to be applied. Under the present Districting system, inequalities exist in the several Schools which opperate very unjustly upon some portion of the inhabitants of the Town. We do not say that all evils would be removed were our District lines abolished; but that they would be lessened to a great extent cannot be doubted. If the apportainment of our scholars among the several schools could be left to the General School Committee, the inequalities as it regards numbers in most of our Schools would find an effectual remedy, and would be placed on an equality with each other, and consequently, should draw the same support from the Town. What a bone of contention and ill feeling would be removed, could this be accomplished. What evil could arise were it adopted? We can conceive of none at all. At the present time especially, when the State of our Schools is such as to demand a change, it would seem that every improvement in relation to them should be carefully and judiciously considered, and if found worthy of addoption to embrace the present opportunity. It would be found were we to establish a High School, that a great benefit would be derived from the abandonment of our districting system. A building might be so constructed as not only to accomodate a High School, but another School, the scholars to be taken from the South and Centre Districts.

Under our present Districting system it is necessary that two new School Houses should be built for the accomodation of the Centre and South Districts, as every School from the Primary to the Grammar is filled to overflowing; consequently relief must be afforded in some way or other, how if we abolish our Districts and leave the apportionment of the scholars to the General School Committee, a house can be constructed and so located, within one fourth of a mile from the Episcopal Church, as to accomodate the High School and also a School of another grade between the Intermediate and Grammar Schools, to be taken from the South and Centre Districts. The whole number of scholars in the South and Centre Districts, estimated according to their average attendance, is, 343, in the six Schools as they now exist. If we establish a High School and take from the Centre and South Districts fifteen schollars from each, makes 30 from the two, it would leave 253 to be apportioned among six and with the additional one to be kept in the High School Building, seven, which would leave about 40 scholars as an average for the seven Schools. Thus it will be seen that all the relief needed for the South and Centre Districts will be afforded; and so far at least as the expense of building goes at the least possible expense; as one House on one site can be built to accomodate two Schools, much cheaper than two Houses upon two sites to accomodate two Schools; so that we shall have a building for the accomodation of a High School without the expense of a single dollar beyond what is already required without a High School for the relief of the South and Centre Districts. An addition to the Houses of the Point and West Districts will be needed in any event; and should recieve prompt attention; but no extra expense for building on account of a High School need be made beyond our present wants without a high School; we will now consider the Teachers and their pay in case the Grammar School are made High Schools. In the first place not a single teacher among our efficiant corps of Grammar School Teachers can retain their possitions; as none of them profess to teach the languages, consequently Teachers must be procured who are competent to teach those branches required to be taught in a High School; which would require a sum not less than $200—per annum, making in the six Grammar Schools $200 additional to what is already paid the Grammar Teachers. But this is not all in four of them assistants will be required; as no one Teacher can teach throughly in addition to what is already taught in our Grammar Schools, the additional branches required in the High School with the increased number of scholars. Then an outlay of $300 annually will be required for assistants in each of those four Schools, which together would make the sum of $1200—added to the extra amount paid for male Teachers would make an aggregate of $2100—extra for teaching annually. We will now calculate the extra expense for teaching in case a High School is established. For the pay of a competent Teacher for the High School $750—; for the pay of the female to teach the School in the High School building, the scholars to be taken from the South and Centre Districts $300. For the pay of assistants at the Point and West $200—; which several sums added together would make for the amount of teaching were a High School established $1250. Take this from the extra amount for teaching if the Grammar School take the place of the High School and it leaves the sum of $1150 in favor of the single High School annually. Let us now see if this $1150—that our Grammar Schools converted into High Schools will cost us, is to be made up to us in the benefits they confer over the establishment of a single High School. One of the most important things to be accomplished in our Schools is the proper grading of them; so that all the scholars in each school shall be as near alike in their capacities and attainments as is possible to make them; as it is apparent to all that the nearer we can approxionate to perfect equality, the nearer we can appropriate to a perfect classification of the scholars. The labor, expense, and success of Teaching, depends in a great measure upon the accomplishment of this object. It is deemed unnecessary to adduce arguments to prove this assertion, as it must at once commend itself to every reflecting mind. One great advantage then to be derived from a High School is, that it introduces another and higher grade; taking from our grammar Schools the more advanced, and placing them in the High School, leaving the remainder nearer an equality, and thereby not only reducing their numbers, but confering a still greater benefit, by lessening the number of classes. Another benefit we should derive from bringing them nearer an equality, would be the new stimulous; that it would create in those remaining in the Grammar Schools; as the principle obstacle would be removed to there becoming the best scholars in school; a competition would spring up which before offered no encouragement.—The most powerful incentive to action in man is to bring into proximity those whose capacities and powers are nearly equal; let there be great inequalities and the tendency is to weaken and to paralize all effort. There is yet another powerful motive to act upon the minds of those remaining in the Grammar Schools; the desire of being prepared as spedialy as possible to enter the High school, and this let it be remembered cannot fail to operate upon the minds of the Teachers to bring their pupils forward better qualified, and at an earlior age, than the Schools of the same grade in town. Let us glance at some few of the advantages of those scholars transfered from our Grammar to the High School. In the first place they will find new rivals as they enter the High School, and their energies will be taxed as they never have been, to maintain their standing in heir class. They are not checked and constantly retarded in their progress as they have been by being classed with scholars of inferior rank in scholarship. The great ultimatum of their desires will be to stand among the first scholars in the first School in Town. Parents from the time their children first enter the Primary School, will be stimulated by the thought and impart it to their children, that every effort must be made to attain to the highest rank in the highest School in town. The question may be asked whether the scholars generally in Town will avail themselves of its privileges.—If the experience of other Towns where High Schools have been established can be considered as a test, and even those Towns where the number of inhabitants falls far short of the number obligating them to have a High School if, we say, they shall be taken as a list, most triumphantly, shall we be sustained in saying that its benefits will be diffused throughout all classes of society. How many examples do we find of the lone Widow amid her penury and want, by her industry and strict economy, educating her children not only at the common School, but carying them successfully through the higher branches of literature and science; and how many instances do we find of men occupying the highest position in society turning around and with a heart full of gratitude blessing that self sacrificing devoted mother. It would seem then that no class of people among us could offer as an excuse that they could not offered the bare time their children occupy in educating them for the various stations in life, where High Schools have been established, is it the children of the rich, or of the poor that have maintained the highest rank? Almost invariably the children of the poor, what then becomes of the argument that a High School is no benefit to the poor man? shall all the experience of every Town where High Schools have been established, together with the wisdom of our Mann', and sears' and other great lights in the cause of education; we say shall all this be thrown to the winds and have no influence in determining our choice? we will hope for better things Quincy has had her full share of influence in State and Nation, in those councils that have established the best Gouernment for the whole people found under Heaven. Let us so educate our children in morals, literature, and science, that it shall never be said of us we have departed from the wisdom, Patriotism, and integrity that so eminently distinguished our ancestors. On us rests the responsibility of training up a geeration who are to establish not only the character of our Town in coming time, but generations to come are to be effected for weal or for woe by the decision we make upon this question. Let us throw aside every prejudice then and be governed only by true wisdom. It has been remarked by an eminent Philanthropist and statesman, that no where on the face of the Globe is labor better paid, better fed, and better educated, than in Massachusetts. To what it all this attributable? no intelligent son of Massachusetts need be told it is her system of Comon Schools. Where else can be found men constantly springing up from the poorest and humblest walks of life, filling the most important stations not only in the councils of our Nation, but throughout all the ramifications of society that give character and worth to our free institutions! What is of greater importance then than elevating and perfecting our Common Schools; and what we would ask is better calculated to do this than the establishment of a High School? It is merely adding but another story to the great edifice already commenced, and can it be that we will refuse it this crowning excellencie, could our youth that are about to make the transition for boyhood to manhood, could their real interests decide the question we would rest content. But when we look around and view the numbers that need the teachings and influence of wise and virtuous instructors, of those of our youth that are just breaking forth from the more immediate influences of home and begining to combat with the vices and temptations of the world, we cannot be silent in their behalf. Shall we, friends of Education, friends of humanity, shall we neglect the cultivation of the mind that is destined to endure long after the body it inhabits and all else material, shall be lost in our common ruin.

Signed in behalf of the Committee,

LYSANDER RICHARDS, CHAIRMAN.

TAKING THE CENSUS.

Madam, will you please inform me of the number of inhabitants in this house?'

'Sir?'

'The population in this mansion.'

'Well, there are eight in the room overhead.'

'How many?'

'Eight.'

'Are they all adults?'

'No, they are all Smiths, except two boarders.'

'Smiths! black or white Smiths, madam?'

'I'd have you to know I don't live in a house with niggers.'

'I didn't allude to color, I meant their calling.' Last night you'd have found out, for they were calling the watch as loud as they could scream.'

'Madam, I merely wish to know how many people you have in this house, and what they do for a living.'

'Yes, yes, now I understand. Well, let me see, there's the two mullinuses, that's one.'

'That makes two, madam.'

'Well, if you know best, count 'em your self.'

'It is my business to enquire, madam.'

'Well, you had better attend to it, then, and not bother me.'

'Madam, I am out with the census, and—,

'Well, you act out of your senses, I should think, to come into my house asking such questions.

'It is in accordence with an act of Congress, madam.'

'Well you tell Mr. Congress, or whatever his name is, he acts very foolish, sending you round, axing sich shaller silly questions.'

DOCTOR AMESBURY

'I 'spose youv'e hear of him, hain't you?'

'I never have.'

'Well, then, I'll tell you. One day I met the Doctor over at Simpkin's store, buying greceries. It was awful cold, I felt a little hoarse, and my tongue was somewhat furry; so says I.

'My head feel's a litt'e akish like, what do you think I'd better do?'

'Says he, 'Friend S., the best thing you can do, is to go straight home and soak your feet, and take a sweat, 'cause if you don't you might have a fever.'

'Says I, 'doctor, I was just thinking that a sweat would do me good, and now I guess I'll do it.'

'So, home I went, and drank a bowlful of tansey tea, and if I didn't sweat like a beaver its no matter. The next morning my head was as clear as a bell, and I was well again.

'Well, a day or two afterwards I met the doctor, and says he,

'Neighbor S., I have a small bill against you.'

'I looked at him, and says I 'a bill?' and says he.

'Yes' a bill for advice you know, at Simpkin's the other day.'

'What do you think he had charged me? why one dollar for telling me to go home and take a sweat.'

'Well doctor says I, (because I would'n'appear small you know) its all right, and I'll bear it in mind.'

'Well, a few days after, the doctor was passing by my door to his chaise, and some how or other, one of the wheels got a little loose; so says I, 'doctor, if you don't drive that linch pin in an inch, the wheel might come off'

'Says he, 'I thank you.' and he drove in the pin. Well, I went into the house and just made a charge of it. When I met the doctor again, I presented him the bill.'

'Halloa! what on earth is that?' said he,

'Why, that's for advice.'

'Advice for what?' says he.

'Why for driving in your wheel pin; and I have just charged you eight and six.'

'That's all you owe me,' says I.

'Well, I'll bear it in mind,' says he.

'But the doctor is as tight as a candle mould, and I guess he is able to bear it in mind.'

THE LAST DOG STORY.

The advantages of advertising are admirably illustrated in the following incident, which we find recorded in the last Sandusky Democrat:

Mr. Luke Horton, of South Eighth street, keeps a dog called La Vega, an ill favored, fierce-eyed brute, whose unruly habits and cross-grained temper caused him to be held in detestation by the family in general, and by Mrs. Horton, his mistress, in particular. La Vega, however, is a great favorite with his master.

About a week ago Mrs. Horton became exasperated on account of some unendurable offence committed by La Vega, and privately bargained with an old collector of soap fat, named Abe Walker, who, for a dollar fee, agreed to to take the dog off and 'render him up' into tallow, or otherwise relieve Mrs. Horton from the annoyance of his presence.

Mr Horton, on coming home to dinner, inquired for La Vega, and was chagrined with the information that his trouble-some pet had absconded. For some days the absence of La Vega gave occasion for much rejoicing in the household, and even the grief of Mr. Horton for his loss was made the subject of many a sly joke in his domestic establishment.

Mrs. H. congratulated herself excessively on that lucky thought of hers, which cleared the house of the odious brute; and, though a lady who thinks a good deal of a dollar, did not grudge the money, since it gained her object so effectually. In the meantime La Vega was detained a close prisoner in the cellar of the soap factory, amusing himself by snapping at the rats which coursed about the premises, and sustained himself, like Napoleon at Elba, with the belief that the objects of his destiny were not yet accomplished.

On Tuesday morning Mr. Horton appeared at the breakfast table with a beaming countenance. 'Well, my dear, good news!' said he to Mrs. H. 'What is it?' asked the lady with some secret misgiving. 'I've La Vega back again! Advertised for him; offered a reward for his recovery, and this morning he was brought home by Abe Walker.'

'Heavens!' ejaculated Mrs. Horton; 'what did you have to pay for him?' 'Only eleven dollars,' replied Horton, 'one for the advertisement, and ten to old Abe for bringing him back.' 'Merciful goodness!' replied the unsympathizing wife. 'Eleven dollars, (enough to buy a silk dress) for the recovery of such a nasty cur! and to think that I gave the black rascal a dollar for taking him off.'

This inadvertent confession, of course, produced a matrimonial duel; the report of which we omit, as it might appear stale and commonplace to some of our married readers.

By this little canine speculation all parties were gainers. Abe Walker, the cunning darky, gained ten dollars; the advertising sheet gained one dollar, and Mr. and Mrs. Horton gained some valuable experience, which will teach them the importance of mutual confidence between wedded parties.

CONVICTED BY A SHARK.

In the United Service Museum in London, there are a great many interesting things to be seen, al of which, together with the funds to sustain it, are furnished by the officers of the Army and Navy.

Among the rare things there collected is a shark's jaws with six rows of teeth, and attached to them is an account of how, where, when, and under what circumstances the fish was caught, the substance of which is as follows:

In the war of 1812, numerous British cruisers were on the look out for American vessels all over the world. One day an English corvette sailed into Port Royal harbor, Jamaica, with a prize she had taken on suspicion of being a Yankee, but as there was no papers on board, and no flag but the English, she could not be convicted. She was therefore left in the harbor with a prize crew on board, and the cruiser sailed out.

Two days after leaving Jamaica she fell in with another British cruiser on the same station, and came near enough for the captain of the corvette to board the other. He was met on the quarter deck by the other captain, and they compared notes. The captain of the corvette said he had just taken a prize, but was afraid he could not convict her, as there were no papers on board. 'What is her name?' asked the other, 'The Nancy.' 'Oh, I know her. The Nancy, Capt. Brush, supercargo John Williams.' 'Why, where did you see her?—that is the captain's name, and the supercargo is also correct.' 'Well walk aft, I will show you a shark we caught this morning and we are drying a part of his stomach on the poop.'

They walked aft, and the Captain handed his visitor the ship's papers which Captain Brush had thrown overboard on being chased, and the shark had picked them up for breakfast.—The two cruisers on making this discovery made sail for Port Royal together, where they arrived. The Nancy was convicted, by the papers found in the fish, and the two British cruisers shared equally in the prize.

MUSIC AND MIRTH. The Sable Brothers, eminent for their performances, the storm alone preventing them from acting last Wednesday evening, but having faith they will make an effort next Wednesday evening, and from the reputation they have uneversally acquired, we advise the admirers of fun and music to attend.

PURE BLOCK TIN PIPES.—We would call attention to the advertisement of these Pipes by Messrs Dalton & Ingersoll, in this paper. They are fast superseding the use of lead pipes, for wells, and are recommended by the first chemists in the country.

THE STORM. J. W. Bennett, the entripid Superintendent of the Light House on Minot's Ledge informs us, that the last that was seen of the light was about half-past ten on Wednesday evening last; and that he went about four the next morning, and found fragments of the same on the Beach.—The two persons in the light-house were certainly lost.

Much damage on the wharves in this town was done, and especially have E. Wood and White & Dearborn suffered.

Several vessels are ashore on the beach in this town, but little damage has been done to them.

A portion of the roof of the Stone Church at the Railway Village was blown across the street, and a tree alone prevented it from breaking through a house on the opposite side.

The Cellars under Quincy Market are partially filled with water, and great dammage was done to the provisions stored there. The cellars under the stores in North Market street were also partly filled

The tide made a complete breach over Charlestown and Chelsea bridges, so that passengers were unable to pass over.

The streets around the Winthrop Church Charlestown, were blockaded by the City Marshal, for fear that the steeple would also be blown over.

A schooner sunk on South Boston flats about 10-1-2 o'clock. Three men were aboard, one of whom is supposed to have been drowned: another was taken off in a boat, and at last accounts the third was clinging to the top-mast.

The amount of damage in consequence of the high tide, we cannot learn. It must be considerable.

RAILROAD DAMAGES.—The late gale seems to have done considerable damage to our railroads. The track of the Old Colony Road at two points between Neponset and Boston, has fallen, the tide having washed the gravel from under it.

It is said that some forty rods in length are thus injured, and that it will take at lea a week to prepare the road for travel.

It is rumered that the Eastern Rail Road is in the predicament, the loyality of which we have not yet heard.

SEDUCTION, &c. A rather novel case was brought before one of the Philadelphia Aldermen on Saturday. A married woman was bound over to answer the charge of misdemeanor in seducing a young man. She rented a room during the past winter, where she kept him. The innocent victim is about 18 years of age, and the suit was brought by his father.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES, with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, BERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates than is generally charged for novelties,

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit-bearing trees thereby securing correctness of nomenclature

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahlias, and Green House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and embraces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the proprietor and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent

POETRY.

FETCHING WATER FROM THE WELL.

Early on a sunny morn,
While the lark was singing sweet,
Come, beyound the ancient farmhouse,
Sound of lightly tripping feet.
'Twas a lowly cottage maiden,
Going, why, let young hearts tell,
With her homly pitcher laden,
Fetching water from the well.

Shadows lay athawt the pathway,
All along the quiet lane,
And the breezes of the morning
Moved them to and fro again,
O'er the sunshine o'er the shadow,
Passed the maiden of the farm,
With a charmed heart within her,
Trinking of no ill nor harm.

Plensant, surely, were her musings,
For the nodding leaves in vain
Sought to press their bright'ning image
On her ever busy brain.
Leaves and jovous birds went by her,
Like a dim, half waking dream,
And her soul was only conscious
Or life's gladdest summer gleam.

At the old lane's shady turning,
Lay a well of water bright,
Singing, soft, its hallelujahs
To the gracious morning light,
Fern leaves, broad and green, bent o'er it,
Where its silver droplets fell,
And the faries dwell beside it,
In the spotted fox glove bell.

Back she bent the shading fern leaves,
Dipped the pitcher in the tide—
Drew it, with the dripping waters
Flowing o'er its glazed side.
But, before her arm could place it
On her shiny, wavy hair,
By her side a youth was standing!—
Love rejoiced to see the pair!

Tones of tremulous emotion
Trailed upon the morning breeze,
Gentle words of heart devotion
Whisper'd neath the ancient trees.
But the holy, blessed secrets,
It becomes me not to tell;
Life had met another meaning—
Fetching water from the well!

Down the rural lane they sauntered,
He the burthened bitcher bore;
She, with dewy eyes down looking,
Grew more beautious than before!
When they neared the silent homestead,
Up he rised the pitcher light;
Like a fitting crown he placed it
On her her head of wavelets bright.

Emblem of the coming burdens
That for love of him she'd bear,
Calling every burthend blessed,
If his love but lighted there!
Then still waving benedictions,
Further—further he drew,
While his shadow seemed a glory
That across the pathway grew.

Now about her household duties,
Silently the maiden went,
And at every radiant halo
With her daily life was blent,
Little knew the aged matron,
As her feet like music fell,
What abundant treasure found she,
Fetching water from the well.

MY MOTHER'S VOICE.

My mother's voice! how often creeps
Its cadence on my lonely hours!
Like healing sent on wings of sleep,
Or dew to the unconscious flowers.
I can forget her melting prayer
While leaping pulses madly fly,
But in the still unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by
And years of sin and manhood flee,
And leave me at my Mother's knee.

The book of Nature and its print
Of beauty on the whispering sea,
Gives still to me some lineament
Of what I have been taught to be.
My heart is burdened, and perhaps
My manliness has drunk up my tears,
Aud thare's a mildew on the lapse
Of a few miserable years,
But nature's book is even yet
With all my mother's lessons writ.

ANECDOTES.

'Father,' said a roguish boy, 'I hope you won't buy any more gunpowder tea for mother.'

'Why not?'

'Because every time she drinks it she blows us all up.

'Go to bed, sir immediately.'

'A waggash spendthrift said, a few day's since, 'five years ago I was not worth a cent in the world now see where I am through my exertions?' 'Well, where are you?' 'Why. I owe more than three thousand dollars.'

"How is your son to-day?" asked a friend of a stock broker.

"Very bad replied the old gentleman, striving to compose his agitated features, "very bad indeed? I would not give ten per cent, for his chance of life."

"Illustrated with cuts," said a young urchin, as he drew his pocket knife across the leaves of his grammar, "Illustrated with cuts," said the schoolmaster, as he drew his cane across the back of the young urchin.

ALWAYS OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than

SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,

to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated

PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,

swelling the already immense collection to upwards of

HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,

the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely

NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,

ONE HUNDRED FEET in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to

Mock Reality,

and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of

with his Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.

THE PRODIGAL SON,

returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of

THE CRUCIFIXION,

composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.

Christ Disputing with the Doctors;

a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,

in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

THE SIAMESE TWINS,

and their beautiful American wives.
Representation by nine figures, of the

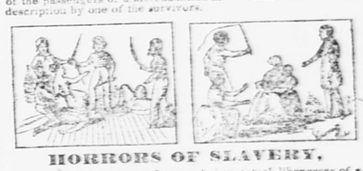
of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.



HORRORS OF SLAVERY,

as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.

MURDER OF MISS McCREA,

by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.

INTEMPERANCE,

and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.

Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. In addition of the above, and the immense collection of

One Hundred of Cabinet Size,

BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,

obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,

OIL PORTRAITS

of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;

EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,

and ancient Sarcophagi, 3000 Years old; and an entire

Family of Peruvian Mummies;

the DUCK-BILLED PLATYPUS, the connecting link between the BIRD and BEAST, being evidently half each;—the curious half-fish, half-human

FEJEE MERMAID,

which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, in the years 1840, '41, and '42, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;

Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;

ANIMALS and BIRDS of every nation; Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious

SAW AND SWORD FISH,

all in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unequalled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

In Addition to which, and

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,

visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent

THEATRICAL ENTERTAINMENTS,

given EVERY EVENING, and WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, by a Company of Comedians and an Orchestra of Musicians, admitted to be SUPERIOR to any ever before collected in this country, with the aid of

Stage and Scenic Arrangements,

the most grand and superb ever seen in either Europe or America! thus warranting the universal admission that the Boston Museum, besides being the most comfortable and genteel, is also the

Cheapest Place of Amusement

IN THE WORLD! A single visit will prove the truth of this assertion, as the admission is only

MISCELLANY.

An Awful Silence.

A witless coxcomb, green from college, on one occasion addressed an assemblage of some twenty-five or thirty yeomanry, who claimed to be the paternal guardians of an equal number of young 'uns who enjoyed the privilege of attending the village school, over which the speaker presided in loco parentis. Next morning he paid a visit to his old mother and informed her of his masterly attempt on the preceding evening. 'The evening was far advanced, a few had retired when I reached the climax of my speech. I need not, I cannot if I would, describe to you the magic effect of that stupendeous effort—my maiden speech. Why the house was electrified!'

'You brought down the house with thunders of applause, my son?' asked the old lady as her glasses glistened with delight.

'No the effect was inconceivably greater. There was a period of the most awful silence that one ever heard!'

'La, me!' exclaimed the old lady in joyful astonishment. The old lady proceeded to wipe her specticles, and by her fixed look upon the hearth it was evident that she was beginning to indulge an honest pride, when in stole one of the little 'uns, and destroyed her bright visions by exclaiming—

'Yer can't stuff me ef I ain't been to college. You did't lectrify many, caus there wasn't anybody there but two or three and them was all a-leep.'

Cicero was taken aback, but he had no time to indulge his emotions, as his efforts were called into requisition to restore the old lady who had fainted.

Information Wanted.

Mrs. Partington wants to know—

Whether Masons and Dixon's line was a line of stage-coaches or steam-packet?

What kind of curiosities does President Fillmore's cabinet contain?

Whether the Powder Magazine contains any good reading on the subject of Ladies' Dresses?

Whether the Pope is going to roam all over the world before he dies?

Whether his bulls are as ferocious as ever?

Were the liberty poles which were recently cut to pieces in Paris the last of that noble race?

Is the United States mint any better for juleps than the common mint?

Has the 'Double Eagle' two pairs of wings or not?

Do dead letters ever revive after reaching the general post office?

Do navigators have to double their capes in all lattitudes, or only in cold regions?

A Trumpet Rat.

While the scientific commission was exploring the department of Bone, a soldier came to the President one morning, and offered him 'a little animal no bigger than his fist; but the like of which was never before seen.'

The President, a Colonel, and a man of infinite learning and reseach, looked into the cage, exclaiming—

'This is nothing but a rat!'

'Yes, Colonel but its a trumpet rat; a rat with a trumpet.'

The Colonel, examined it with his eye-glass. It was like the ordinary rat, but from the extremity of the nose, rose a trumpet like the horn rhinoceros, but flexible, and endowed almost with intelligence. He demands the price.

'It is above all price' says the soldier, 'but you, my Colonel, may have it for one hundred francs.'

The bargain is consumated on condition that a female of the rare species is secured at the same price. This secured, the Colonel was the envy of all the savans of the commission. M. Ravoiser could not sleep till he had a trumpet rat, and M. Delamalle fell sick for want of one. They demanded trumpet-rats of all the soldiers they met. The next arrival of the kind brought two hundred francs.

Rats were on the rise. Gradually, however they got to be common; for almost every day a soldier has one of these rare animals for sale. The gradually fell to fifty, then to twenty francs.

The fact was the recipe had been discovered To make a trumpet-rat all that was necessary was to take two common rats, cut of the end of the tail of one and graft it on the nose of the other, completing the rhinoplastic operation with a slip of diachilum plaster, and hampering the animal so that it could not disturb the operation till nature had completed the conjunction. At the end of fifteen days the thing was, done.

Gems of Thought.

Swreetness of temper in a woman is more valuable than gold, and more to be praised than beauty.

When learning ceases to be uncommon with women, learned women will cease to bo affected.

In the affairs of life, activity is to be preferred to dignity, and practical energy and despatch to premepitated composure and reserve.

If women knew their power and wished to exert it, they would always show sweetness of temper for teen they are irresistable.

the habit of being always employed is a great safe guard through life, as well as esential to the culture of almost every virtue.

All affectation and display proceed from the supposition of possesing something better than the rest of the world posseses.

None are more bold or aspiring in their thought than timid people; they thus privately make themselves amends for all they dare not do.

The selfish languor and indifference of today's possession is the conseqaence of the selfish ardor of yesterday's pursuit.

A really powerful mind will not be weighed down by its knowledge, any more than is an oak by its leaves, or than Samson was by his locks.

Much of what a man tells you in the hour of afliction, in sudden anger, or in any outpouring of the heart, should be secret. In this craving for sympathy, he has spoken to you as to his own soul.

Those are mistaken who imagine that indulgence is the way to make children happy, and that restraint will only tend to damp the valatile spirits of childhood, or destroy the natural energy of character incidentol to the youthful mind.

Sincerity is like travelling in a plain beaten road, which commonly brings a man sooner to his journey's end than by-way, in which men often lose themselves.

Forms are often absurd—but the absurdest of all forms is that made by a pair of stays. Why should they be called stays when nothing they are applied to stays where nature placed it Even the wearer don't stay in the world as long as she might.

Nothing can be more foolish than an idea which parents have that it is not respectable to set their children to work.

People often effect to be out humor, to appear of consequence.

Brave is he who is prudent.

Transpiating Shrubs.

In transplantihg shrubs, as well as very small trees, a common error is to place them too deep in the earth. This has arisen from the fack that, by receiving more moisture, they often succeed best in the first summer, at the expense however, of their subsequently healthy growth. It is much better to plant shallow, impating the necessary moisture by means of a deep, mellow soil beneath and by mulching above. The material for the latter my be short litter, manure, moss, spent tan, surface, consisting of these materials, to the hight of six inches, will occasion no injury whatever for a year or two, and admirably equalize the moisture of the soil. Manure used in this way opperates beneficially, not only in preserving the moisture, but increasing the fertility by that liquid manure carried down in solution by rains, especially if applied in autum or winter. The contrast between the hard and baked surface, too often witnessed when the ground is left bare, and the moist and softened earth beneath a coat of manure or litter, can be only sufficiently understood by actual experiment. Its advantages were strikingly exemplified a year or two since in planting out a bed of strawberries in the middle of an excessively dry summer. The roots, after being fixed by Water in transplanting, were protecteted from a drouth by a coat of manure three inches thick, and, although they were watered but once, not a single plant perished.

Staking may be, in some instances, necessary to prevent swaying by the wind, or a one-sided growth, where there are imperfect or unequal roots. But usually, if the shrub is furnished with good roots, and if care is taken while the earth is shoveled in, to spread them all out like the arms of an umbrella, they will serve to brace it evenly, and prevent a one sided growth Fixing by water, as it is tremed, is often sufficient, alone, to preclude the necessity of staking. It is most conveiently done by three persons—one spreading out the roots with his fingers, a second sifting in the earth, while the third settles it by pouring water from the nose of a watering pot. Although soft at first; the soil in a few hours dries and hardens sufficiently to hold firmly the newly-set roots. An additional stiffening, if needed, may be given, by encircling the stem with a small, temporary mound of earth.

In transplanting roses, and some other small shrubs, sufficient pruning of the top is rarely given. Climbing roses, and those generally which throw up rapid and vigerous shoots, will make a better growth in autum, by cutting down to a few good buds when set out, than by leaving a long portion of stem and branches, which indeed, not unfrequently draw so hard upon the roets as to cause the death of the plant. On the other hand, we have seen shrubs transplanted in wet weather with entire success, after having grown six inches, by taking up full roots, and drenching thesoil well with water, at the same time very freely shortening back the shoots, and lopping most of the leaves.—Alb Cultivator.

An Invitation to Dinner.

It was observed that a certain rich man never invited any one to dine with him.

'I'll bet a dozen,' said a wag, 'I get an invitation from him.' The wager being accepted, he goes the next day to the rich man's house about the time he was to dine, and tells the servant he must speak with his master immediately, for he could save him a thousand pounds.

'Sir,' said the servant to his master, here is a man, in a great hurry' who says he can save you a thousand pounds.' Out came the master.

'What is that, sir? You say you can save me a thousand pounds?'

'Yes, sir, I can, but I see you are at at dinner. I will go myself and dine, and call again.'

'O pray, sir, come and take dinner with me.'

'I shall be troublesome.'

'No, not at all.'

The invitation was accepted. As soon as dinner was over, and the family retired, the conversation was resumed.

'Well, sir,' said the man of the house, 'now to your business. Pray let me know how I am to save a thousand pounds?'

'Well, sir, said the other, I hear you have a daughter to dispose of in marriage.'

'I have' sir.'

'And that you intend to portion her with ten thousand pounds.'

'I do, sir.'

'Why, then, sir, let me have her I will take her at nine thousand!'

An Irish Salute.

Two Irishman were left in charge of a ship, while its officers went ashore; and strictly enjoyned not to make or permit any noise on board; but a jug of 'onld Irish' one of them had, and the opertunity for a 'bit of a spree' were too great a temptation for them to resist. They indulged freely, and as manny of our public men have been known to, soon drank themselves into a very patriotic spirit. When one says to the other—

'Be jabers and lets fire a salute.'

'Agreed,' says the other, but that 'ud make the devil's own noise.

'Tut, man, replied the first, 'we'll stop that.'

'Just you hould a bag over the mouth of the gun me darlint, and we'll have a roarin' salute without any noise at all.'

Pat acquiesed in the arrangement and held the bag as directed, while the other touched off the cannon. The officers, hearing the report, hastened on board, where they found only one of the Irishmen, and every thing in a state of bewilderment. He was asked what had become of his comrade. 'Sure,' said he, 'Patherick was boulden' a bag over the mouth of the cannon, to stop the noise, while I touched it off and the last I ceed'd of him or the bag they were goin' in a great hurry towards shore, and that's the last accounts I can give ye.'

Putting the Question.

'Sally don't I like you?'

'La, Jim, I recon so.'

'But dont you know it, Sally? Don't you think I'd tear the eys out of any tom-cat that dare to look at you for a second?'

'I s'pect you would.'

'Well the fact is, Sally, I—'

'O now don't Jim; you're to sudden.'

'And, Sally, I want to—'

'Don't say anything more now, I will—'

'But it must be done immediately; I want you to—'

'O, hush, hush? don't don't say any more'

'I want you to-night to get—'

'What so soon? O, no—impossible! Father and mother would be angry with me.'

'How? be mad for doing me such a favor as to m—'

'Yes dear me! O, what a feeling!'

'But there is some mistake for all I want to hove you do is to mend my trowsers.'

Sally could hear no more. She threw up her arms, and scremed hysterically, and fainted away as dead as a log.

Go-ahead Valor.

It has been remarked that a prudent general always before an engagement secure the means of retreating. Such, however was not the case with the Duke of Wellington, when he fought the battle of Waterloo, with defiles in his rear. If he had lost that battle, which he would have done if fortune had not favored htm in a remarkable manner, his army would have been annihilated.

Lord Nelson, at the battle of Copenhagen, when told by an officer that Admiral Parker had made the signal for recalling the ships under his command, who were about engaging the enemy, made the memorable reply—'You are aware that I have but one eye, and I must keep that on the enemy.'

It is said that Napoleon, in all his numerous battles, never made arrangements for a retreat if unsuccessful. He always calculated upon getting the victory.

It is related of Sir Charles Coote, a distinguished Irish General, that when he commanded a body of troops, for the purpose of surpressing a rebellion in Ireland, he urged in a council of war the propriety of passing certain defiles and causeways before the enemy could get together to oppose them; to which was replied it might be so, but when the country was alarmed, how should they get back? 'I protest,' exclaimed Sir Charles, 'I never thought of such a thing in all my life. I always considered how to do my business, and when that was done, I got home as well as I conld, and hitherto I have not missed of fording my way.'

Examination of Attorneys.

The following racy examination of a candidate for admission to the bar, is decidedly a good hit:—

Examiner—'Do you smoke, sir?'

Candidate—'I do, sir.'

'Have you a spare cigar?'

'Yes, sir, (exteding a short six.)

'Now, sir, what is the first duty of a lawyor?'

'To collect fees.'

'Right. What is the second?'

'To increase the number of his clients.'

'When does your position towards your client change?'

'When making a bill of cost.'

'Explain.'

'We then occupy the antagonistic position—I assume the character of a plaintiff, and he become defendant.'

'A suit decided, how do you stand with the lawyer conducting the other bill?'

'Cheek by jowl.'

'Enough, sir; you promise to be an ornament to your profession, and I wish you success. Now, are you aware of the duty you owe me?'

'Perfectly.'

'Describe it.'

'It is to invite you to drink.'

'But suppose I decline?'

'Candinate (scratching his head)—'There is no instance of the kind on record in the books. I cannot answer the question.'

'You are right; and the confidence with which you make the assertion, shows that you have read the law attentively. Let's take the drinks, and I will sign your certificate.'

Fugitive Slave Law Meeting.

At a meeting of the citizens of Weymouth without distinction of party, holden at the Universalist enuch on Monday afternoon, the 21st day of April, to consider what measures shall be taken by the people in regard to the Fugitive Slave Law, Dr. Noah Fifield was chosen President, Gen. Appleton Howe and F. A. Kinsbury, Esq. Vice Presidents, and N. Blanchard, Secretary.

A committee of five, consisting of Appleton Howe, Esq., F. A. Kingsbury, Esq, L. Humphrey, Esq, Rev. W. M. Harding, and Alvah Raymond, Esq, were appointed to prepare resolutions for the considerations of the meeting, who subsequnetly reported the annexed resolves, which after an able and prolonged discussion by Benjamin F. White, Thomas Hollis, Rev. Jotham Horton, Rev. J. N. Parker, Rev. Willard M. Harding, Rev. James P. Terry, and Messrs Torrey, James Humphrey, Elia Richards, Nathaniel Blanchard, F. A. Kingsbury, Thomas P. Porter in favor, and Lovell Bicknell, Esq., in opposition, and some remarks made by John W. Loud, Esq., and J. W. Thomas Esq. in explanation of their position upon the subject, were adopted with only three dissenting voices.

Resolved, by the assembly of the citizens of the town of Weymouth, that the Fugitive Slave Law passed by the late Congress is unconstitutional and vold; because no authority is confered upon them by the Constitution of the United States to pass laws for the recaption of fugitive slaves, but the whole authority in relation thereto, which is the surrender of fugitives from service, is confered by that instrument upon the individual States; because the said Fugitive Slave Law confers upon irresponsible Commissioners the authority to adjucate upon the alleged claim of the master to his slave, instead of the judges of the courts, the only judicial officer know to the constitution of the United States; because the said Fugitive Slave Law does not admit of a trial by jury, which is guaranted to every person by the Constitution of the United States; and because the said Fugitive Slave Law virtually abrogates the writ of habeas corpus, and totally suspends its exercise after the Commissioner has issued his certificate to claiment, which writ is extended to all persons at all times by the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That the said Fugitive Slave Law is unjust and oppressive in its operation. It converts freeman into slaves. It commands, under severe penalties of fine and imprisonment, free citizens to become slave-hunters and slave-catchers, and converts the free citizens of the free States into the position of slaveholders, making them responsible for the sin of slaveholding.

Resolved, That the said Fugitive Slave Law is derogatory to the laws of nature, and in violation of the Laws of God, which commands "That thou shall love they neighbor as thyself."

Therefore Resolved, That we cannot yield obedience to a law which is unconstitutional and void, unjust and opressive in its operation, and in violation of the laws of nature and the laws of God, but are bound by that higher law which requires to feed the hungry clothe the naked, receive the stranger; and visit the sick and imprisoned, and in this manner demonstrating that love for your neighbor required by the devine law.

Resolved, That we now declare our uncompromising hostilities to this nefarious law and that we will never cease our exertions to procure its repeal until it is blotted from the Statue Book.

Resolved, That Horace Mann, the worthy successor of John Quincy Adams, whose whole life was spent in the cause of liberty and in the service of his country, our Representative in Congress, is entitled to, and deserves, our lasting esteem and gratitude, for his able and earnest opposition to the Fugitive Slave law and that his services will receive the grateful homage of the friends of humanity throughout the world.

Resolved, That this meeting feel under great obligation to Robert Rantoul, Jr., and Charles G. Loring for their able and efficient services in the case of Sims, and he exposing the unconstitutioasality of the Fugitive Slave Law in all its deformity.

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in the General Court be instructed, and they are here instructed to use all their influence for the passing of the bill, for the further security of personal liberty, reported by a special Committe, of which Mr. Buckingham was Chairman, and in furtherance of its beeming a law of the State.

Resolved, That the foregoing Resolutions be published in the Commonwealth and each of the Newspapers of our county, and a copy of the same to be furnished to each of our Senators an Representatives in the General Court.

The Opening
OR
May-day at White's Bonnet Saloons!

We would take this method of informing our patrons and the public that in accordance with our usual custom we have set apart THURSDAY, May 1, 1851, for our "grand Spring opening," and on this occasion we shall spare no effort or expense to introduce to our Visitors styles and Fabrics of a novelty and taste hitherto unequalled, and surpassing in splendor all our former displays.

Our friends at this time are particularly urged to favor us with their presence, as our accommodations alone are worthy of their consideration; as our endeavors have been prompted only by a determination to merit the approbation of our increasing trade, as well as to enlarge our quarters in propotion to the imperative demand. With our recent additions; with these and similar preperations for the coming campaign, we feel sure of obtaining support at the hands of our Patrons, and their just appreciation of our untiring efforts in their behalf. To those unacquainted with us we would saw a single work. Doubtless they are wholly unaware of our extended trade and unlimited facilities for further enlargement, and we are not supprised at the fact; but to such we would state that our present arrangements enable us by every arrival to receive the very latest Parish fashion and fabrics, which, together with our own originalities, under the superintendence of the best artistical talent in her best artistical talent in her profession, (Mrs. A. G. Dawes,) gives us that opportunity for superiority which can only be obtained by those whose close application and unremitting endeavors meet with the appreciation and encouragment of a discerning public. On the appreaching opening, in connection with our Silk Hats, we shall bring forward a new article of French Hair Lace Bonnets of our own importation, of original design, uniting, that unequaled style for which the French are so justly noted and that elegance of finish for which the world has always given them credit; and to this article we would call particular attention, as Connosseurs who have seen them, have pronounced them "Beautiful in the extreme." Besides the novelties which we shall present as strictly our own, we shall present a full assortment of Goods pertaining to our legitimate business, comprising a fall Stock of Straw Goods pertaining to our legitmate business, comprising a full Stock of Straws and Straw

Goods; Paris and American shired Silk Hats; Ribbons in every width and Divers Patterns; every description of French Flowers and Materials; with the usual assortment of Millinery Goods. By the last arrivals we are in receipt of the richest class of Wide Bonnet Ribbons, at such prices as to make them worthy of attention. Always on the alert for novelties, and to keep up that time-honered Festival, the celebration of "May-day," we would kindly invite and promise you a cordial welcome to witness our Annual display or Grand Opening of Paris Millinery, at Nos. 39 & 45 Hanover Street.

Boston, May 1st,

Young Men.

It is a common opinion that young men lack the ripeness of judgment which distinguishes middle-aged or grey-headed men; and hence when they broach any new and startling theory, explosion of old dogmas, the world "fights shy" of them. It is a curious fact however, that some of the greatest discoveries in science as well as the most brilliant literary achievements, have been made by Young Men. Newton was not yet "of age" when he saw the apple fall to the ground. Harvey discovered the circulation of blood at eighteen, and said he could convice no man of the fact who was forty. Hobbs and Berkly put forth their metyphisicaly systems at an early age; and Galileo, Lebutz, and Eulor commenced their discovery while young men Bonaparte never displayed more military genius than at twenty-five in the brilliant charge at Lodi-Burke's Vindication's of Natural Society; written at the age of twenty-six, is considered by an acute critic one of the most eloquent and sagicious of his works. Pitt pilotted the British ship of state through the tempists of the French Revolution—in defiance of a host of enemies on board—at the age of twenty-two. It is well said by Hazlitt, that—

"It is only in youth, before the mind become set in its opinions or the dogmas of others, that it can have vigor or elasticity to throw off the load of prejudice and seize on new an extensive combinations of things. In exploring new and doubtful tracts of speculation, the mind strikes out true and original views; as a drop of water hesitates at first what direction it shall take, but afterwards follows its own course. The very oscillation of the mind in its first perilous and staggering search after truth, brings together extreme arguments and illustrations, that would never occur in a more settled and methodised state of opinion, and felicitous suggestions turn up when we are trying experiments on the understandings of which we can have no hopes when we have once made up our minds to a conclusion and only go over the previous step that led to it."

Wanted! An Honest, Industrious Boy.

Young man—we me mean you particularly. who are now reading these lines—have you ever investigated the real import and true meaning of the expression at the head of this article? You have no doubt often seen the exact words a hundred times repeated in our daily papers, but have you derived that impressive moral lesson which it is intended to convey? And you too, of a larger growth than mere boys, have you the requisite qualifications to answer it honestly and truly? If not—remember it is the language of another—that an honest, industrious boy is always wanted. He will be sought for; his services will be spoken of in terms of high commendation; he will always have a home; he will grow up to be a man of known worth and established character.

He will be wanted. The merchant will want him for a salesman or clerk; the master mechanic will want him for an apprentice or journey man; those with a job to let will want him for a contractor; clients will want him for a lawyer; patients for a physician; religious congregations for a pastor; parants for a teacher of their children; and the people for an officer.

He will be wanted. Townsmen will want him as a citizen; acquaintances as a neighbor; neighbors as a friend; families as a vistor; the world as an acquaintance; nay, girls will want him for a beau, and finally for a husband.

An honest industrious boy! Just think of it boys, will you answer the description?—Can you apply for this situation? Are you sure that you you will be wanted? You may be smart and active, but thrt does not fill the requisition, are you honest? You may be capable—are you industrious? You may be well dressed and create a favorable impression at first sight—are you both honest and industrious?—You may apply for a good situation—are you sure that your friends, teachers, acquaintances, can recommend yan for these qualities. O, how would you feel, your character not being thus established, on hearing the word 'can't employ you.' Nothing else would make up for the lack of these qualities.—No readiness or aptuness for business will do it. You must be honest and industrious—must work and labor; then will your calling and election for places of profit and trust be made sure.

Curious Antipithies.

Henry III. of France could not stay in the room where there was a cat; though so immoderately fond of dogs that the Duke of Sully says on his first audience, he had a basketful of young puppies suspended by a black string from his neck, and was playing with them all the time of the conference.---The Duke d'Apernon would faint at the sight of a leveret.---Marshal d'Elbert could not even smell fish without being greatly agitated. Scaliger trembled at the sight of water-creses. Tycho Brahe felt his limbs sinken under him when he met either a hare or a fox. Bacon swooned at an eclipse of the moon; and Boyle fell into convulsions on hearing the sound of water drawn from a cork. James I could not endure the sight of drawn sword; and Sir Kenelm Digby tells us, that "the king's hand shook so much in knighting him, that he would have run the point of the sword in his eye if the Duke of Buckinham had not directed it to his shoulder." La Motte de Vayer could not endure music, but delighted in thunder. An Englishman in the seventeeth century, was nearly expired whenever the fifty third chapter of Isiah was read to him; and a Spaniard, about the same period, fell into a syncope when he head the work lana (wool) mentioned th ough his coat was made of that substance.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, APRIL. 26th, 1851.

John A. Green, Editor.

"The Carpet Bag.—Such is the quaint title of a weekly quarto newspaper, published and edited by Messrs. S. W. Wilder, and B. P. Shillaber of Boston, the fourthly as well as the previous numbers having been received. This unique and characteristic issue is richly stored with reading matter of mirth, interest and instruction. The character of its editors, especially of the senior one, is sure guaranty of its high moral and intellectual tendency. In all its mechanical respects it is deserving of high merit. We cordially greet its appearance, and hope a liberal harvest may be reaped by the deserving founders.

"Godey's Lady's Book." This magazine is always deserving of praise; its merits seem too well known to require a multiplication of words. All consider that it outvies any other publication of its kind. We may simply say, subscribe and you will never regret money so applied for a publication such instrinsic worth. C. Gill & Co., of this town, are the Agents.

Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—The following gentlemen have been chosen officers of this Company:—

President, Hon. Lysander Richards.
Treasurer, Israel W. Munroe.
Secretary, Stephen Bates.
Solicitor, William S. Morton.
Directors, Lysander Richards: William S. Morton; Israel W. Munroe; Gideon F. Thayer; Thomas C. Webb; Whitcomb Porter; Stephen Bates; Daniel Baxter; William B. Duggan; Luther Munn of Quincy:---A. Richardson, Roxbury; Jonathan H. Cobb, Dedham; Albion Turner, Scituate; Alfred Loring Hingham. James Maguire, Randolph; Appolos Randall South Braintree; George Thompson, Milton; Orrin P. Bacon Neponset.

Old Colony Railroad. The cars commenced running according to their published arrangements, on Thursday last, the damage done to the road by the late storm having been nearly repaired.

Musical. The Weymouth Brass Band give a concert at the Town Hall, in this place, to-night, the admittance to which is twelve and a half cents

The Hancock House. This hotel will be opened, again as soon as the repairs are finished, probably about the first of May, by George H. French, whose reputation as a landlord is too well known to require praise from us. The house has been thoroughly repaired, and will be furnished with new furniture.

United States Senator. The House succeeded on Thursday last, in electing a Senator for six years. It being the twenty-sixth ballot.

Excursion to New York. An excellent chance is offered to visit New York City, next Monday afternoon, with the privilege to remain all the week, a ticket to O. E. Dodge's concert, and all for the low price of five dollars both ways The Norwich and Worcester route is quite a pleasant one, and the Steamer Connecticut a safe, commodious and splendid boat. If you have never been to Gotham, a visit will interest and amuse as well as seeing something of the world. Tickets for sale, at the Worcester Depot in Bostoz.

The cholera has made its appearance in New Orleans.

Commodore James Barron, Senior Cpstain United States Navy, died at Norfolk on Monday last, in the eighty-third year of his age

Asa W. Fary, of Lawrence has been appointed District Attorney for the Northern District, in place of Charles R. Train, removed.

The annual reports of the different rail-roads in Massachusetts to the Legislature shows that over twenty-three million passengers have been carried by them over their roads during the past year.

The public rumors of the Cuba invasion are greatly exaggersted. A project of some kind has doubtless been formed, but it has been very imperfectly matured.

The Governor has appointed Stephen H. Phillips, of Salem, District Attorney, in place of Asahel Huntington, resigned.

The tide at the Navy Yard, in Charlestown, rose nearly a foot above the dry dock coping, which was placed by the engineer, Col. Baldwin, four inches higher than the highes tide known for sixty years

A telegraphic despatch has been received in Boston, that the Acorn with Sims and his guard had arrived at Savannah.

NOTICE

A meeting of the "Union Board" will be held at the house of John Hardwick, next TUESDAY EVENING, April 29th, at 7 1-2 o'clock.

J. M. WADE, Secretary.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting. EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES, with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, BERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates then is generally charged for novelties,

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit-bearing trees thereby securing correctness of nomenclature

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahlias, and Green-House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and embraces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the proprietor and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent

POETRY.

HUMAN LIFE.

Our lives are like the ceaseless flow
Of rivers to the mighty sea :
Swift hurrying past each scene they go
To mingle with Eternity.
And man is like some gallant bark,
By the resistless curent borne
To that dread ocean, from whence whose dark
And untried borders none return.

Of all the myriads that before
Have gone its countless host to swell,
Not one has from that tideless shore
Come back, there history to tell !
The stream rolls on—but where are those
It bore but yesterday ?—the wept—
The loved—their freight of joys or woes ?
Oblivion's wave o'er all has swept !

Our life is but a vapor dark,
A morning mists, that's skyward borne
Is seen no more ; a meteor spark,
One moment flashing bright and gone.
The vapor fades—even while we gaze,
It melts into the viewless air ;
The transient meteor's dazzling blaze
But makes the gloom it leaves, more drear.

Though youth's bright sun with rainbow light
May arch the distant future o'et,
'Tis early shouded from our sight
By manhoods clouns—to shine no more.
MidMournful memories —hopes betrayed,
And vain regrets, our days are passed,
Till in Earth's sheltering bosom laid,
Forgetfulness is won at last !

Our life is like the desert bleak
Wide spread o'er Afric's burning soil,
We wander through it faint and weak,
Harrassed by want and faint with toil,
If whilst some freshly verdant spot
Amid the arid waste appears,
Whose loveliness is ne'er forget,
How soon 'tis veiled by grief and sears !

We strive for what ? to build a name
O'er which the scuds of time will sreep
And leave no place for empty fame—
For triumphs where we ought to weep,
As the mirage whose treacherous ray
But mocks the traveller's straining eye,
Even love and hope soon pass away
And leave us thirsting faint, to die.

Life's spring time hues are faint, but brief—
Their Eden beauties early gone ;
And age steals on with autum leaf,
Sad, scentless, desblate and lene.
Though haply when their mates are dead,
Some few pale flow'rets wave—
Theirs is the mournful fragrance, shed
From roses blooming round the grave.

Oh ! who to longer here can feel
A wish, condemned with bosom torn
Beside the shattered whreck to kneel,
Of all he loved--and vainly mourn—
When, heir of sorrow from his birth.
To man this blessed hope is given –
Though doomed to strife end toil on earth,
There's rest and peace, and joy--in Heaven.

COMMON SENSE.

She came among the gathering crowd,
A maiden fair without pretence,
And when they asked her humble name,
She whispered mildly, " Bommon Sense."

Aer modest garb drew every eye,
Her ampla cloak, her shoes of leather,—
And when they sneered, she simply said,
" I dress acbording to the weather,"

They argued long, and reasoned loud,
In dubis Hindo phrase mysterious;
While she, poor child could not divine
Why girls so young should be so serious.

They knew the length of Plato's beard,
And how the scholors wrote in Saturn ;
She studied authors not so deep,
And took the Bible for her pattern.

And so she said, " Ezcuse me, friends,
I find all have their proper places,
And common Sense should stay at home
With cheerful hearts and smiling faces."

ALL'S WELL

The clouds which rise with thunder slake
Our thirsty soils with rain ;
The blow most draeded falls to break
From off our limbs a chain ;
Our very sins and follies make
The love of God more plain ;
As though the shadowy lens of even
The eye looks fathest into heaven,
On gleams of star and depths of blue
The glaring sunshine never knew.

ANECDOTES.

'Did I not give you a flogging the other day ?' said a schoolmaster to a trembling urchin.

'Yes,sir answered the boy.

'Well, what does the scripture say on that subject ?'

'I don't know sir, except in the passage which says, it is more blessed to give than to receive.'

"Pray, Miss C." said a gentleman the other evening, "why are ladies so fond of officers ?"

"How stupid," replied Miss C., "is it not perfectly natural and propers that a lady should like a good offer, sir ?"

They have opened a public school for boys in New Orleans. Terms of admission, clean faces and clean clothes. Scho'ars few.

MISCELLANY.

TALCAHUANO CHILI JAN. 2d, 1851.

Mr. Editor:—Having much leisure while on my pilgrimage to the 'Land of Promise;' I employ much of it in writing for amusement and now and then in writing a letter to some friend. Knowing the interest usually taken in the narration of travels, I have thought it might not be uninteresting to some of you readers to peruse an epitome of my experience while on the passage. I know that I can present nothing new that I saw or experienced while on the 'great deep.' The subject is exhausted, for every writer has shed much ink in publishing to the world the tale of his sea-sickness, or the severe gales of wind or his perils and hair-breath escapes from a watery grave; of this the public can but be satiated. My present purpose then shall be to describe to them as nearly as I am able, what I saw in 'strange lands.' I fear that it will be somewhat prolix and I know that it will be very desultory and disjointed.

Let me then premise by saying that we sailed from Boston Sept. 5th, 1840 in the Bark Cochituate (myself and wife and son) that we have all been well, have been one hundred and fourteen days to this Port, were five days to the equator, were ninety-five days to Cape Horn, that we saw land but once which was the Cape, have had but one heavy gale of winds. Sept. 5th, three days out, had a good time round the Horn, have been rocked in Old Ocean's Cradle to our satisfaction and are safe and sound, at anchor in this beautiful harbor. Our passage has been a pleasent one. I know of no better way to tell you the things that I saw, than by making extracts from my journal; for you know all distinguished travellors keep a journal.

'Saturday Dec. 28th. 1850. At three o'clock P. M., cast anchor in the harbor of Talchahuano (pronounced Tal-ka-war-ner) in the bay of Conception. Were immediately boarded by the Officers of the Customs and the Captain of the Port. Several boats came off; some after passengers for the shore, some to pilfer what they could lay their hands on, and others to leave their cards as furnishers of water and provisions &c. Went on shore and regaled our eyes for the first time with a view of a Spanish City. And what a sight! The houses are all built of brick, the walls about four feet thick, one story high, and the roofs covered with tile or thatch. Some of them have no glass windows, and many that have, are protected by a strong iron grating—many of them have the earth for the floor, yet most of them are covered with an elegant carpet. The exterior of the buildings, present a meager poverty stricken appearance, without the least architectural display, except in their uniformity and are either crooked, warped or deformed in some particular. But in the interior it is far different; the rooms next the street are furnished in the most splendid style, Brussels Carpets sofas, chouches, elegant chairs, centre-tables &c. The houses have no chimneys and the cooking is done in the back-yard among the chickens, pigs, and donkeys. Even the Church which is built of brick, is destitute to all pretensions to elegance, and the inside is even worse—more like the barns of a New England farmer. The frame and brick work is in full view, with two windows and the floor is literally covered with dust and filth. The only public building are the Calaboose and a building that I should take for any thing else but a Custom House. With the exception of three or four of the more considerable Merchants, the shops are small, bnt fitted with every variety of wares, dry goods, hardware and clothing, who is made by the senoras and senorites who invariably attend the counters. Some of them are Creoles, bordering on the pure Castilion, have pretensions to beauty, but generally the sallow and dusky complexion quite neutralizes the effect of their jet black hair and eyes. Besides these shops every street has its wine stores and fruit stalls, the former lined with fanciful painted shelves, and filled from floor to ceiling with glasses and china-ware, and bottles of wine, ale, cordials, cogniac, or aguardieute. The strong drink is consumed chiefly by the laboring people; but all classes drink much of the light cordials and cloret wines. Rows of dusty and empty bottles, however, the long shelves bereft of merchandise, the evidence of poverty and the want of industry with many. Here may be seen a fort with three guns and two men, surmounted by the Chilian flag—built with mud walls about eight inches thick and its strength makes us yankees laugh. The city is laid out in a level plane, has these streets paralled with the shore and are crossed with at eight angles by about twenty more; so that the whole has a pleasing appearance from the heights near by. In the city centre of the grand parade ground or plaza which is worthy of notice only as a distinctive feature of a Spanish town, and is not to be named in comparison with any of the public squares of our large cities. It has a flag-staff in the centre, is covered with spare grass, and is a general play-ground for the children, who instead of jeering and annoying poor cripples, or other pitable objects of humanity, as in our free country, are contented with the antics of a favorite dog, or to war with a beligerent mule or goat. Fronting on the plaza stayed the Calaboose and the Holy Church, one a fit invitary institution for the other. Immediately after leaving the back part of the town, we came to the foot of the hills that surrounded it, the tops of which are about one thousand feet above the tide water and are very steep. Upon the hill sides, and about the out-skirts of the city, the poorer classes build their huts; the walls if any they have, are composed of poles, interwomen with brush and sometimes covered with mud, but many of them are destitute of any wall whatever. The roofs of all are thatched. Much the larger population live in this manner. In the centre are a few stones where the cooking is done, and the whole serves as a shelter for the family, including, cow, hens, varmin, donkee and pig. The latter quadrupeds are so poor that they could jump through a sheet of glass without its breaking, and consequently they make no shadow. The horse also has a residence with the family, and I verily believe he is the most respected and most respectable part thereof. Of one thing I am now more convinced than ever—that the real, imperative wants of men are very few; the most of our supposed wants, are imaginary and conventional. Every boats that lands, for there are no wharves, must do so at a particular point and every bundle or baskets ransaked by the officers. My little boy took on shore a paper box to bring off some fruit and he had around it a string to keep the lid on: immediately on landing, he was ordered up to the Custom House; the officers all gathered around to seize what they supposed was contruband goods, about to be smuggled by the Americans, and they seemed utterly confounded and astonished to behold its emptiness. The oxen are yoked by lashing a pole across the horns, on the top of the head and the driver goes directly before them with a long whip, the lash made of heavy rope with the end divided like 'a cat o nine tails,' and when he wants them to go forward he beats them on the head, with great cruelty, jabbering all kinds of lingo, nothing of which I could distinctly hear except vamvose, vamvose, careno. The best cart in the place has not one particle of iron in its construction, being a lot of poles tied together with withs. The wheels of the better kind are made of a single plank, are about two feet high, with a hole through it six inches in diameter, into and through which the axeltree is placed, which just half fills the hole and is left outside of the wheel ten inches in length. The hole of the linch-pin is boared with a two inch auger, and the pin is a foot long. The wheels are never greased, and the discordant music of a hundred wheels is anything but pleasing to the ear, the noise can be heard at times, for miles, and and is supposed to be cheering to the cattle attached. Altogether they present a most amusing specimen of the antique. The heavy loads that come from a distance are brought on the backs of mules and asses; some of them I noticed had four live sheep, and the skin of one on their backs, and now and then a mule had a barrel of water on either side. When they come in from the country one man rides on horse-back and drives perhaps a dozen of them before him, tied together head and tail, each laden with wood, vegatables, wheat, wine and the produce of the country generally.

When they are ready to butcher a bullock they enclose several of them in a yard and mount a horse, armed with a sharp instrument, made similar to a spade with a long handle; they then select with care the animal they want, ride up to him behind and urge him to a full run, when they throw the 'rechar' at one of his hind legs, which severs the cords of the ham, and the beast immediately falls—the work is then completed with a knife.

Sunday, Dec. 29th. To-day myself and Mrs H. went on shore to witness the manner the Catholicks spend the Lords Day. Gambling is the all prevailing vice of the place. Old men of fourscore and boys and girls of six years, were seen at games of chance, hazzarding their cincos, medois, and reals; and the genteel Castilian sitting opposed by a dirty half breed or Kanacker. I am told that the Ladies are great adapts at the art. I think that large sums are seldom staked; but is done more for amusement than any thing else; or predominating a trait in the Spanish character, which they have not the energy or courage to attempt in more manly forms, splendid billiard tables were in requisition and card playing was to be seen at every turn. The market was open and all the shops; the military were out in full numbers with music and we heard a long harangue from the principal Officers which was all Greek to us. The soldiers are a queer looking speciciman of the regulars of an army. There are about eighty or at least a hundred, their uniform consists of course, dirty white linen pants a shirt of the same made a la blouse, and worn outside a blue cloth scull-cap with red band in front, contrasting a la diable, with their black faces; and bare feet with long toes complete the tout ensemble. Schouldering their clumsy condemned English muskets and bagonets—the latter suitable for a toad-sticker they handle morning and evening in their barack yard, going through their evolutions with tolerable accuracy, but still forcibly reminding one of Jack Falstaff and his buckram warriors. After witnessing the celebration and parade of the morning, and partaking of our cafe we strolled forth to explore this ancient town and port. We took a look into the Church and found a few females on their knees at devotion; each one carried with them a beautiful rug to keep their garments from the polution of the floor. There were no regular exercises and when there was no one in to need the spiritual auidance of the Priest he went home—when others came he was sent for. When he passed in the street each person was obliged to uncover the head and also on passing the doors of the Chuch. In the afternoon several companies were engaged in dancing to the music of the quitar accompanied with beautiful singing by female voices. To close the day we want to a horse race which was more animated than any any other amusement and at which their was much beting. In the evening there were several balls. Thus the Sabbath was spent; strange sights truly to Puritans eyes, yet perhaps the day was as well spent, and not less accceptable to the Lord than in some Potestent towns where the people make great protensions in matters of religion, visit the Chuch of God, to show their rich costumes or scan that of others and cover a soul full of sins with the detestible veil of hypocricpcy.

Monduy Dec. 30th. Spent all the day on shore, rambling the hills and walking to and froo through the city and upon the sea shore. Twice this place has been destoyed by earthquakes. The last time was in 1835, when nearly all the dwellings were demolished, more damage was done by the water than by the earthquake, yet nearly all the inhabitants saved themselves by flight to the hills. The water receded and then returned with a tremendous wave burging the city many feet in depth. Frequent shocks are now felt and when the rumbling is herd at a distance every one flees to the street and waits its coming. This port is in South Lat 36 1-2, the climate is delightful, frost is never known and earth produces everything sportaniously, (except wheat and potatoes) necessry for man and beast. Grapes Strawberries apples and Cheries grow wild in great luxurience and the rose is in the perenial bloom I saw and eat strawberries as large as a hen's egg. The land is not adapted to grass, for there are no rains in the summer season, but is excellent for grazing. There is no hay cut but little fodder of any kind; the horses are fed on the bran of Wheat and the American Consul told me it cost him less than twenty-five dollars to keep his horse and he kept him in the stable through the year. The only grain raised is, wheat, which is very fine, large quantities of flour is shipped to California and other Markets. The transition from daylight to darkness is of course very sudden in this latitude but allthough deprived of the delightful hour of twilight, we were fully compensated by the dazzling beauty of the night. The moon and stars shone with wonderful brilliancy and the air was filled with large fire flies, sparkling like gems of sapphire. There are nine flour mills in the place and American laborers and Mechanics readily obtain three dollars a day and a man capable of superintending a flour mill can realize $2000 a year—board is four dollars a week. This state of things however will last but a short time; many from the U. S. bound to California stop here, rather than risk their chance further and many from California come down here, either disappointed in their expectations, or sick with the prevailing diseas of that climate.

Tuesday Dec. 31. To-day myself and Mrs. H. were fortunate enough to hire the only American or Eurnopean carriage in the place, to go to the City of Conception. I would have been amusing for our friends at home, could they have seen us in a carriage resembling a covered carryall, having two seats inside and one outside, with one horse in the shafts, and led by the driver astride another horse alongside, continually plying the whip over his head: added to this another horse with a rider armed with the indespensible spurs, went before us? now trotting off a little distance and then returning making most fatastic gestures to coax our team along. The horse by the side of the shafts, had a belt tightly girt around his loins, with a single trace attatched to it and the other end hooked to the end of the forward axletree, so the help rendered by him, tended to crowd the principle horse from the road. The harness was a good one, had rings in the saddle for reins, yet the reins laid quietly on the outside seat and the Peon had not sagacity enough to use them in their proper place. The distance to conception is nine miles over a splendid road, perfectly hard and level, but it took two hours to perform the journey. The city was built about three hundred years ago, is laid out in squares on a level plain the streets are very wide, the side walks, are skirted with fruit trees of all kinds on either side and have a beautiful appearance. The houses are built much like those at Talcahuano, with no external decorations, one story high, and a stranger would suppose that the best establishment in the place could be purchased for a few hundred dollars, but I am told that some of them are worth seventy-five thousand. All the outdoor ornament consists, in the garden; which is surrounded by buildings in the form of a paealellogram, some of them have a fountain and the walks are beautifully paved with marble. We were passing the gateway of a gentleman when the attention of my wife was attracted by the large size and beautiful fruit of an orange tree; we stepped inside just to look at it, when a sylph-like senorata, went tilting across the garden to a door and directly the father came out when we supposed we were to receive the reward of our temerity—he beckaned us to stop invited us to walk into the garden which was full of rare flowers, and seemed to take delight in witnessing our manefestations of pleausure. His daughters made up several boquets which they presented to us and by this time we supposed politeness required us to retire, but no! The Don insisted we should 'walk in.' we complyed and I never before saw so magnificent a sight—the rooms were of large size (about 20 by forty feet) carpeted with a superb Brussels and elegantly wrought rugs and furnished with sofas, ottomans, couches, centre and pier tables, chandiliers of silver, silver and gold candle sticks beautiful curtains and everything of elegant workmanship.

We noticed an organ and a metal bedstead with circular top, and the whole covered with burnished gold. We were treated with preserves in fretted dishes, with highly wrought spoons, with wine, Old Glasgow pale ale and cigars. At parting we received a hearty grasp of the hand and a benediction. All my dreams of luxury, never more than equalled the realities of this mansion and its occupants, and had I the position of the President of France or of his Highness Prince Albert, I could gladly exchange them for this seclusion in a populous city. We next went to the Cathedral, an immense building, built of bricks and ornamented outside in the style of the days of Charles V. The doors were opened and we entered with a bent knee and uncovered head. The architecture of the interior is more effective the exterior. The central rave is apparently seventy feet high with an open roof, and on each a double row in immense quadrangalar columns with arches between. The high alter is quite a fine affair, with saints innumerable, and over the crucifix a silver stock presides with her young. There are also other shines to various saints, with pictures of the Crucifixion, Last Supper, Madonnase, &c. Over one of these we saw what we supposed to be the figure of an Indian clinging to a tree, with an arrow transfixed through the heart, and one through each arm. Still above this appeared a figure like St George standing over the dungeon, with helmet, sword and shield, but no steed. This we imagined to be good old St. Patrick, killing the father of serpents and the other some cannonized Indian deity. If wrong in these surmises, we trust that good and indulgent padrez, will attribute it to the ignorance of depraved heretics, which so far as their system is concerned, we acknowledge ourself to be. Near the alter the pavement is covered with tomb-stones, of padrez and great folks. One to the memory of a pious senora, we observed, was embelished with the figures of an angel opening the gate of heaven and a lady weeping at the tomb; and another was of beautiful Parisan marble, in the form of a cross with an inscription which we could not interpret. By the side of the principal entrance we also saw the usual white marble points of holy water, resorted to by all the faithful.—Two or three inferior organs supplied the music. There were several women veiled in black around the alter. Before we had time to notice half the pageantry, and while we were viewing the holy virgin, the young priest retired and immediately two savage looking fellows entered, with unearthly grimaces in their faces, and by threatening gestures ordered us out, and in duty bound we obeyed. The host is carried every afternoon through the streets, and it was a strange sight to us, to behold the Crucifix hung not only with the image of Christ, but with elegant cords and tapestry; was it soon Calvary? carried by priests all in white robes, and followed by a band of musicians and many more priests all in white, chanting in full chorus and unearthly tones, the ghostly train swept by. From every door and window issued half-clad devotees to kneel and repeat their prayers, while over all the impressive scene, the heavens declare the Glory of God, and the eternal firmament shed it bright lustre on the just and unjust, the city of Conception has been visited by it. Eeighteen thousand persons perished in the ruins. The earth was thrown up several feet within the dwellings, the walls were overthrown, the roof fell in and many were buried beneath; but more were destroyed by the overflow of the tide. Many of the ruins still remain. We returned in the afternoon and laughed until our sides were sore, at our unique establishment and at the jabber and contortions of countenance made use of by our drivers in urging the horses along. We passed two fellows chained together by the ankles to work in the highways and superintended by a soldier with a musket,—they took of their hats and implored us with all their might to liberate them from bondage; we could not understand enough of their tongue to ascertain their crime and we concluded not to interfere with the Chilian government in the punishment of their convicts—we parted receiving curses on our heads for our hard-heartedness. The Spanish people have no tender feelings towards the brute creation except for the horse; he is well fed well sheltered, and idolized: yet when mounted he is continually goarded with spurs, the points of which are one and a half inches long. A horseman equiped reminds me of a game cock ready for the pit. I forgot to notice in the letter that cock-fighting is one of the amusements of the people, and one that affords them much sport.

Wednesday January 1st. 1851. To day we went on shore for the last time to spend 'new year's.' In the morning took a stroll along the sea shore, picking up rare shells and eye-stones. In the afternoon the captain of the boat gave a dinner at five o'clock and we seated early to take a walk over the highest hill (900 feet) the prospect was delightful. Fearing to take a horse, or rather Mrs. H. being no horsemen we went to the dinner on foot some three miles, it was in a fine grove and in the manner of our picnic. I suppose it is considered degrading in this country to walk; the finest horse-riders I ever saw are the Spanish ladies, in full riding costumes, each vying with the others to show their agility in leaping fences and ravines in exhibiting their coquetery or gallantry. Although new year's day we took a walk in nature's great pond, or rather in the fine bay of Vincent while our friends at home probably enjoying a sleigh ride habited in wool and firs.

The people here are a mixed race of Spanish, Indian, and Sandwich Islanders (no negros amongst them) are dark copper colored, have long black hair, which they are careful in preserving, but are homely in features and face. This is the case with the majority of the natives, but the pure Castilion is as handsome here as in any country. In character the educated classes are kind, generous, and open-hearted anxious to acquire our language, and to afford every facility and inducement for our residence among them. Their manners, with less of the punctilo, and none of the hautier of of those of the Spaniards, partake of equal politeness and greater sincerety. The character of the uneducated and laboring class of the natives is of course inferior in these qualities but they are nevertheless remarkably inoffensive and kind hearted people. Nothwithstanding the general inferiority of their mixed race, and the somewhat enervating effect of the warm climate, they are able to undergo a great bodily fatigue, and submit to arduous labor as cargodores, canoemen, muleters &c. Cheerfulness and song predominating traits in their composition. They are altogether devoid of legitimate enterprise and business capacity.—Every hour in the day the aquadores may be seen carrying four little jars or kegs of water fastened to the pack saddle of a mule; these are sold at a real each, and thus the families receive their supply of fresh water. Though they drink aguardiente or cogniac yet intoxication is not common among them. Some females living in houses not costing over ten dollars appear at a ball in a dress worth two hundred and highly ornamented with jewelry.

The poorer classes are often in possession of a shawl from India, worth in New York or Boston a hundred dollars or more—indeed every woman and girl wears a shawl whether in the field gathering wheat, or at the spring washing sailor's clothes by the dozen, that the finest ladies of New England would be proud of, the people seem to be more unhappy in their relations, than in anything else. Prostitution is very common among them and it is not uncommon for the husband to have a mistress in the wife of his next neighbor, and the wife a lover perhaps sheltered under the roof of her own husband. I am told that the priesthood, who have taken the vows of eternal celebracy and chasity, are not entirely free from iniquity of this kind. The ladies wear no bonnets but cover the head with a shawl, sometimes covering the whole head except their jet black eyes sometimes one fold is carlessly thrown across the nose or chin and at others hangs at ease from the shoulders displaying a bust that the fashionables at Old Point Comfort or Saratoga might envy. Their Costume although appropriate enough to the climate is rather different from our preconceived ideas of modesty and propriety. A white petticoat, or with the better classes, a black silk one, discends from the short waist; above this a loose chemist ascends unwilingly, or rather hangs provokingly from the short sleeved shoulder. It is usually surrounded with fringe or deep lace; this with slipper down at the heel or neat morocco shoe and white stockings, completes the in door attire. When dressed for mass or circus the hair is neatly plaited and set off with pearls or golden ornaments. The style of dress among our fashionable belles, we fear cannot plead adaption to the climate like that of Chili. What would the modestly attired daughters of the celestial Empire say to the beautiful barbarians of America. The well worn motto of 'honi soit qui mal y pense' we fear is too much relived on in these latter day. The rose in every variety flourishes in great perfection, ladies Eardrops ten feet high cacterses, water-plants, hyderangers, Jerusalem cherrytrees in the native state. The air is redolent with fragrance from innumerable varieties of flowers, and the woods resound with the melody of feathered songsters of the most delicate and gorgeous plumage, when walking in the streets or fields, the little girls are continually presenting the stranger with boquets and single flowers of every description, with no thought of reward, except the pleasure of giving, and this is done with the sweetest smile imaginable. This port is a great resort for American whalemen, who come in for supplies of wood, water, and provisions, is capable of accomodating a thousand vssels, perfectly secure and is easy of access.

Thursday Jan 2d. At ten o'clock the cry of 'the anchor is home sir,' told us that we were again on our way to the golden gate. We passed a ship having the flag of Old England droop at her mizzen; the starry banner flew to our peak, and waved a brief adieu, as we gave three hearty cheers in exchange for the bluff huzzahs of our English sailor friends.

Saturday Jan 4th. This morning had a full view of of the Island of Juan Fernandez which is certainly a dismal looking place & reminded me of the words put into the mouth of Robinson Crusoe by some poet—I am Monarch of all I survey. From the centre all round to the sea of my right there is none dispute I am Lord of the foul and the brute, and well might he 'start at the sound' of his own voice

Tuesday, Feb 25th. To day after a pleasant voyage we arrived in sight of our haven, took a pilot in the afternoon and at sunset passed the portals of this far western El Dorado, and cast anchor in the beautiful harbor of San Francisco. Next morning, threading our way in a small boat among some five hundred sail of vessels lying at anchor in cove and mostly deserted by officers and crews, we landed on a fine wharf. Here was a strange scene, vessels from every quarter of the globe, had brought denizens of every clime; and verily to coin a suitable word, we were in the Cosmopolis of the world. Dis harged convicts from Sidney, Mexicans, Kanakas, Peruvians, Chilians, Representatives of all the European Nations, with here and their the dangling cue of the Chinaman, were intermixed like stray cattle in a pound. But I refrain from saying more. The climate is delightful; flowers are in full bloom and the prospects for business are generally good. J. A. H.

Hon. Robert Rantoul Jr.

The distinguished gentlemen whose name heads this article, will, it is earnestly hoped be elected on the 26th, of the present month a member of Congress from the second, or Essex District. Indications warrent the belief (if proper vigilance is used) that his election is sure. It would gladen the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands of the friends of liberty to witness such a result. Every true democratic voter of that District should be at the polls on that day. The choice is now between him and Charles W. Upham. One or the other must be chosen at the next trial;—recollect that: with the democrats of District No. 2. there cannot, will not be any hesitation. They will bestowe their votes on Mr. Rantoul. In his manly and avowed opposition to the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, he but speaks the real sentiments of the people North of Mason's and Dixon line everywhere. Had he been elected on the unconstitutional principle and sustained this law in Congress, he would have proved recreant to his constituents and to Massachusetts. The Fugitive Slave bill (as it is called) is more odious in its present shape with us at the North, than even the old Alien and Sedition Law under John Adams administration was. For the honor of humanity, it should at least be materially modified. In taking this ground, Mr Rantoul has departed from no republican principle. He stands forth the same bold, fearless and able champion of Democracy as ever. He has too strong hold on the confidence of the people of his District, to have it weakened for a moment, by the vituperation of the pro-slavery press. Like the precious metal, the harder they rub the brighter will he grow. In the various public situations in life he has been called to, who doubts that he has ably and honorably discharged every duty? The Democrats of District No. 2, are peculiarly fortunate that they can, (if they will,) have a gentleman of such exalted talents and unsullied integrity, as the Hon Robert Rantoul Jr. possesses, to represent them in the next Congress. We repeat it rejoices the hearts of the friends of Liberty and Equality everywhere, to witness such result.

LAW AND ORDER.

Foreign journals speak of a boy only seven years of age, the son of a clergyman at Iserlohn, who is said to compare with Mozart in the precocity and extraordinary developements of his musical powers. Such is the incredible fineness of his ear, that having lately heard a difficult choral piece played on a church organ, he, upon reaching home, repeated on the piano and transposed it a dozen times. He equally excels in his talent for other instruments.

The persons employed in taking the census of San Francisco states that he finds more people from Massachusetts than from any other State.

Among the personal property of the late Gov. Hill of New Hampshire, are advertised two pews in the Baptist Church, three in the Episcopal, and four in the Methodist. This, says the Portsmouth Journal, showed no sectarian preferences.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1851.

John A. Green, Editor.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS. The Govenor and Council have fixed upon Monday, May 26th, for election in the 2d, 4th, and 7th, Congressional districts of Massachusetts. At this election the plurality law will be in force, and there must be a choice.

MINOT'S LEDGE. The towboat R. B. Forbes, Capt Morris, from Minot's Ledge, came up to Boston for coal, water and provisions. She has on board the circle for the reflectors of the lighthouse. Saw the bell in about ten feet of water, the hanging part broken off. Some of the house is a cable's length in shore.

MONSTER OX. The magnificently great Ox raised by Col. N. C. Baldwin, of Cleveland, will soon be on a pilgrimage to the World's Fair. He has been fattened for eight years, and now weighs the enormous figure of four thousand pounds.—The world may safely be challenged to produce an equal. A mile per day is now his longest land journey! He will be transported East by water, and from Boston will need a pretty good sea draft for his individual comfort.

THE DEATH PENALTY. The joint special committee of the Legislature of Massachusetts on the subject of capitol punishment, have reported a bill for the abolition of the death penalty, and providing that the offences punished by death under the present code shall be punishable by imprisonment in the State Prison for life.

A COSTLY CHURCH. The New York Mirror states that the trustees of Trinity Church, intend erecting in the upper part of that city an Episcopal Church which shall excel any structure of the kind in New York, original in its design. The sum to be expended is said to be one million of dollars.

PIGEONS BY THE TON. There were brought to the New York market in one day, by the American Express Company, over seven tons of pigeons.—This company alone have brought since the first of last month, over the New York and Erie Railroad from the counties of Steuben and Alleghany over fifty six tons of pigeons.

THE ERIE RAILROAD COMPLETE. On Monday morning of last week a train of passenger cars started from New York, and passed over the whole line of the road, to Lake Erie. In twenty hours, running time, a distance of four hundred and fifty miles was passed extending from the Atlantic borders to the Western Lakes, which in former times and under favorable circumstances occupied ten to twelve days. The telegraph line has accompanied the Railroad, and in twelve minutes their arrival was known in the city of New York.

THE CUBAN EXPEDITION. The proclamation of the President with regard to the proposed expedition against Cuba, shows the promptness with which he has acted in this matter, and the evident determination to sustain the laws, which will meet the hearty approval of every right thinking person.

NEW YORK HATS. Now is the time to purchase a good and fashionable hat, from the extensive and popular manufactory of Beebe & Co., of New York City, as they can be obtained at Dinegan's Clothing Emporium in this town, who purchases them direct from "head quarters." That they are the best, in every respect, none will deny who have worn them.

Dinegan has also in the clothing line a very extensive and fashionable assortment, and purchasers should call and see him.

OLD SQUANTUM HOUSE. Bacon and Roberts of Boston, are soon to open this popular summer retreat. They are gentlemen of experience in this line of business, and will give a high character to the place. Make them a visit and you will find every thing well managed.

A course of fifteen temperance lectures will soon be delivered in Charleston, S. C., by distinguished speakers. The lectures will severally be addressed to particular classes of community, such as mothers, masters, literary men, Christians, lawyers etc, and will afterwards be published.

The three cent coin will be issued from the mint on the first of May, when there will be an accumulation of half a million pieces to start with. They are to be paid out, in order of application, in sums of thirty to one hundred and fifty dollars, and will be exchanged for American gold or silver coins, or foreign silver coins.

A meeting of the citizens of Newburyport, including those recently annexed to that town from Newbury has been held, and voted to apply for a city charter.

An eagle, worn out by age, and supposed to be ninety years old, was lately killed by a shepard in the woods of Boulac, France. It had on one of its legs a copper ring, on which were inscribed hyeroglyphics that could not be deciphered.

Among the act adopted by the late Legislature of Michigan, was one abolishing all laws for the collection of debt. "The honor of the man is hereafter to be the foundation of all ordinary transactions." Michigan has now in force most of the national reform measures.

Oran White, Esq, has been appointed a Justice of the Peace.

New counterfeits are afloat of the "John Hancock Bank," of Springfield, Mass—tens altered from one and well done.

There were thirteen cholera deaths in New Orleans during the week ending 12th inst.

Notice.

PROPOSALS will be received by the Govenor of Massachusetts and a Committee of the Town of Acton in said Commonwealth, for the construction of a Monument to the memory of Captain Isaac Davis, in the Town of Acton.

The model for the building of said monument may be seen at the State House, in Boston, and any information as to the material of which the same is to be built and the time of construction with all other particulars may be obtained from J. T. Woodbury, a member of the House of representatives and of the Committee aforesaid, who will also receive proposals for the building of the same up to the 19th day of May next.

Said monument is to be built entirely of Granite with unhewn fronts, and it is thought that Granite suitable for the same may be found in abundance, not far from the spot, where the monument is to be built.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpass- ed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting. EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES, with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, BERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates than is generally charged for novelties,

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit-bearing trees thereby securing correct- ness of nomenclature

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahilas, and Green House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and em- braces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experi- ence of many years, will be made by the proprietor and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent

POETRY.

A RIVER AT NIGHTFALL.

Rowers rest! the night is come,
In the west the the last light fades;
Either shore lies dark and dumb,
Changing fast to formless shades.

Dark the anchored vess els ride,
Dark against the sky the spare
Giddily swing from side to side,
Oft the tall masts blot the stars.

But the river takes no shade
From the Darkness closing round;
In its own great light arraved,
Shining more, and more, profound.

And the currant, as though freed,
Doubly seems to increase and run,
One might almost dream its speed,
To the Infinite hastening on.

Fair illusion; but more fair,
An illusion none is this,
That in this dark world of care,
Buried hopes and fleeting bliss

Oft the immortal human soul,
When around her all things lower,
Most pursues her glorious goal,
In her self renewing powet

THE DYING BABE.

Why press it to thy bosem still,
Aud wipe those tears away,
Which o'er lt's little cheeks do steal,
Like pearls of purest ray?

Mother! see that angel yondet!
Behold his outstreched hand!
Beckontmg now to bear thy babe
To the celestial land?

See now thy infant's closing eye;
Soon, to its Father's throne,
The little spirit will have flown,
Ah! see! it's going—'tis gone!

* * * * * * * * *

Mother, mourn for the babe no more;
Now happy it will be,
A seraph giving praise to God,
Throughout eternity.

No hunger pain or suffering,
Is known to heirs of Heav'n;
But joy! eternal joy! and praise
Around the throne is given.

THE BEST OF TIMES IS NOW.

"There is a good time coming, boys,"
Is the burden of the song,
Such is the poetry of youth,
Ere life and hope are gone;
But when the sun of life declines
Age cries, "how changed are men!
Things were not so when I was young—
The best of times was then."

"There is a good time coming, boys,"
Is true enough, I trow—
And says the plain unclouded truth,
There is a good time now.
Why not improve the present, then,
Where'er the future lead,
And let each passing moment's page
Bear proof of thought and deed.

"There is a good time coming, boys,"
Makes many a heedless youth,
Who all forgets the present hour—
The first the greatest truth,
That of all times since the earth was began,
The present is for him—
That age will soon his powers waste,
And palsy mind and limb.

"There is a good time coming, boys,"
And many a one has passed—
For each has had his own good time,
And will have to the jast,
Then tarry not oh! eager youth;
For fairer galss to blow,
But bear in mind the fiast of truths—
The best of times is now.

HOPE.

I marked an organ grinder in the street
And how he watched each window low and high
With most inquiring and artistic eye,
To catch the wish to hear his music sweet,
Retailed like cider, from the barrell dark,
That from his neck depended by a string,
The bearing which abroad its rapuiure fling
Would kill all wish again to hear the lark!
And still he walked—no call from low or high—
Jeanotte from his Jeanette no moment fled,
And all unburied lay old Uncle Ned,
And Poor Susannah didn't deign to cry!
Hope's podestal that organ man might grace,
With expectation's sunshine in his face.

ANECDOTES.

A young lawyer who had paid his court to a lady without much advancing his suit, accused her one day of being insensible to the power of love. "It does not follow," she archly replied, "that I am so because I am not to be won by power of attorney.

"Well, Joe have you ground all the tools that I told you to do in the morning?" 'Yes master,' said the green apprentice, "all except the handsaw I couldn't get the gaps out of that."

A boy fell asleep at the Tabernacle at St. Louis rose up, walked to the pulpit, and shook hands with the preacher.

Why should marriage be spoken of as a tender tie, when it is so confoundedly tough that nothing but death can cnt it?

BOSTON MUSEUM,

Tremont Street,.....Boston.

ALWAYS OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than

SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,

to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated

PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,

swelling the already immense collection to upwards of

HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,

the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely

NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,

One Hundred Feet in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to

Mock Reality,

and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of

with his Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.

THE PRODIGAL SON,

returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of

THE CRUCIFIXION,

composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.

Christ Disputing with the Doctors;

a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,

in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

THE SIAMESE TWINS,

and their beautiful American wives.
Representation by nine figures, of the

of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.

HORRORS OF SLAVERY,

as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.

MURDER OF MISS McCREA,

by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.

INTEMPERANCE,

and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.

Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of

One Hundred of Cabinet Size,

rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. The entire of the above, and the immense collection of

BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,

obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,

OIL PORTRAITS

of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;

EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,

and ancient Sarcophagi, 5000 Years old; and an entire

Family of Peruvian Mummies;

the DUCK-BILLED PLATYPUS, the connecting link between the BIRD and BEAST, being evidently half each;—the curious half-fish, half-human

FEJEE MERMAID,

which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, in the years 1840, '41, and '42, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;

Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;

ANIMALS and BIRDS of every nation; Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious

SAW AND SWORD FISH,

all in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unequalled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

In Addition to which, and

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,

visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent

THEATRICAL ENTERTAINMENTS,

given EVERY EVENING, and WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, by a Company of Comedians and an Orchestra of Musicians, admitted to be SUPERIOR to any ever before collected in this country, with the aid of

Stage and Scenic Arrangements,

the most grand and superb ever seen in either Europe or America! thus warranting the universal admission that the Boston Museum, besides being the most comfortable and genteel, is also the

Cheapest Place of Amusement

IN THE WORLD! A single visit will prove the truth of this assertion, as the admission is only

MISCELLANY.

Neremiah Flufkin's Visit to Boston.

Neremiah Flufkins was one of those unfortunate specimens of the genus homo, that seem by some accident to barely escaped shooting out of the ground in the form of a cabbage, and to have been born with all the outward semblance of humanity. Spite of his awful greenness, Flufkins was an observant chap, anxious to look about the world, and to use his own words, be some pumpkins.' He came to Boston one day to see the elephant, and innocently suffered all manner of tricks to be played upon him, such as paying twenty-five cents to go inside the Common, a charge made by a cunning boy, who discovered that Flufkins had just come down. Another of the 'b'hoys,' who had received his cue from the lad who had charged the entrance fee to the public common, stopped Nehemiah as he came out and passed down Tremont street, and politely tapped him on the arm, he said:

'Fifty cents fine sir,' at the same time holding out his hand for the money.

'Fifty cents! Creation, what fur?'

'The mayor's house, sir.'

'Wot of that?' asked Flufkins, looking at the house designated by the other.

'You have passed it just now, 'without taking off your hat!'

'How yer talk. S'posin' I did?'

'Why, that fifty cents fine in Boston.'

'No!'

'Certainly; and unless you pay it, I shall be obliged to take you to the Police Office.'

'W-h-e-w! Well here's a half. Let's see which house it is, said Nehemiah taking off his hat.'

'That's it, sir, the next but one where we stand.'

'Wall, I won't git caught agin, anyhow,' said the innocent Flufkins, as he walked back and forth before the house of a green grocer, and fixed the spot in his mind.

Scarcely had Nehemiah Flufkins turned another corner, before he was stopped by the third person who had got the hint from the other two operators.

'What's the matter now!' asked Nehemiah, 'I haven't passed another mayor's house, have I?'

'No, but you forgot your landing fee.'

'Landing' fee—what that?'

'Why, head money.'

'What, head money! Do yer have tu pay for keeping yer head on?' asked Nehemiah innocently.

'No—you don't understand, my friend. I perceive that you must be a stranger to the city.'

'Wall, I guess I am.'

'You see the law is, that any person arriving in town for the first time, shall pay seventy-five cents head money.'

'Do tell.'

'Yes. What route did you come by.'

'Fitchburg railroad.'

'That's it!' exclaimed his persecutor, as though he had made a discovery.

'What's it?' asked Nehemiah.

'Why, you are the fellow the police are after.'

'After me, what fur?'

'For slipping away without paying your money.'

'Wall, look a' here, mister, it's pretty extensive business, 'pears to me; but there's three quarters, will that fix it?'

'Yes, that is all right—you are free now to look about the town,' said the other, walking away with a suppressed chuckle.

'Thank ye,' said Flufkins; 'only to think of the perleece after me! Well that was an escape.

If there was one thing above another for which Nehemiah had a weekness, it was smoking. At home, his pipe was in his mouth half the time, and seeing some cigars in a window, he felt the desire come over him, and so he walked in, purchased a 'long nine,' lit it, and and walked out into the street, smoking as he went along, looking into the shop windows in Washington street. The fact was, Nehemiah was now really breaking the city ordinance, and laying himself liable to a fine. It was not long before a policeman, with his badge of office on his hat, accosted him.

'Sir, you must put out that cigar and walk with me,' said the officer, with an air of decision that staggering Nehemiah.

'What fur?' stamered Flufkins.

'Smoking in the streets.'

'Is there a fine for that tew?'

'Yes, sir.'

'How much?'

'Five dollars.'

'Creation! Five dollars. I haven't got but six left.'

'Don't help it, you must go with me.'

'Look a' here—hold on!' said Nehmiah; 'I don't want to go no whar.'

'But must,' said the officer, at the same time looking about him slyly, and seeing no one very near, he added: 'If you choose to pay me, why it will save your being locked up.'

Locked up? Creation! Here, there's five dollars,' said Nehemiah, handing the officer the money, who pocketed the change and walked away—leaving Mr. Flufkins standing alone seemingly afraid to move backwards or forwards, for fear he should incur another fine.

And this was the case; Flufkins was afraid to move lest he seould break some other unknown law of the city. He thought the matter over, as well as he could in his confused state of mind, and remembering that he had just one dollar left, enough to carry him home in the cars, he looked about him for a moment to see that no one was by to stop him, and then scratched gravel like a new one back towards the depot. As he approached the grocer's house, that had been pointed out to him as the mayor's, he pulled of his hat and on'y ran the faster, until he was out of sight of it.

At the head of Hanover street, he was partially stopped by some one who wished to ask the way to some other part of the city, being, like himself a stranger—but Nehemiah had eyes and ears only for one thing, and misunderstanding the question, halloed out:

'Can't help if 'tis a fine to run; I havn't got no money.' And he dashed on like mad towards the railroad station.

Nehemiah didn't let on much about his visit to Boston, but merely said he didn't stay long it was so pesky expensive.

Foreordination.

In the city of Providence, there lived a few years since—and does yet, for ought is known—a garrulous old gentleman who was forever boring all who would listen to him, on the subject of foreordination.

Among the unbelievers, to whom the old man was particularly annoying, was his youngest apprentice, a lad of fourteen years of age, with cross eyes, and a white head.

If the lad fell and hurt himself, he was pacified with the assurance that it was foreordained by the divine will of providence, and that if all things could be seen, it would at once be discovered that everything had turned for the best.

Having been joked pretty hard about his white head one morning, by some imprudent boys in the street, the apprentice entered the office of the old gentleman, and between smothered sob- and a few trickling tears, gave vent to his annoying misfortune, and a determination to procure a bottle of some newly invented hair dye, and give his head the an appearance a little more resembling that of other boys.

Before his entire complaints and misfortune could be made known, however, the old fellow adjusted his specs, and in a voice of the greatest solemnity exclaimed, 'Robert my boy! long before the hand of time had pointed its sacred finger to the day of your birth, it was foreordained, in the regions of ter-cetestial bliss, that for some happy, good and benificant end—not yet known to us, poor blind mortals, on earth—your hair should have, during your stay among the cold and unsympathizing members of mankind, a shade far lighter than that growing upon the heads of other boys of your own age. Therefore Robert, through respect to the divine foreordination of Providence, calm your sorrow and indignation, and be assured it was ordained for the best.'

Robert's dander was riz,—he couldn't stand it any longer; so placing the palms of each hands upon his hips, and spreading his legs like a pair of dividers, with his head thrown back, and searching glance with one eye on the boss, while with the other he was examining the cobwebs on the ceiling, he exclaimed, Deacon Jenks, do you suppose that everything is foreordained aforehead?'

'Most assuredly I do,' replied the deacon, 'havent I presented text upon text, time again, to prove beyond a doubt that such is, and ever has been the case?'

'Well, you have got off a good many texts on the subject, that's a fact,' says bob, 'but now I want to know,' (and here Bob's eyes fairly danced with the half suppressed out-gushings of merriment,) 'I want to know, Deacon Jenks, if you spose the Almighty foreordained that John Brown was to build that brig ship of his this fall?

'Of course I do,' says the deacon, 'I know he did,'.

'Well, then John Brown lies like blazes,' says Bob, 'for I heard him say last night that he wasn't going to build it 'till next spring.'

It is of course useless to say that Bob received his walking papers the next morning, and was given to understand that he was considered as too dangerous a lad to associate with the deacon's family.

The good old deacon occasionally afterward launched forth on his favorite hobby, but he could be easily silenced by the slighest allusion being made to John Brown's ship.—Carpet Bag.

Singular Occurence.

We learn from a reliable source, that not many weeks—it may have been years since, a married married man living in Charleston, went home rather unexpectly one night, and on entering his accustomed room, found all in darkness; but from the quiet breathings of the partner of his cares and joys, knew that she was there, and began to disrobe himself preparatory to retireing. He had not proceeded far in this operation, when the wife awoke, and called out as if alarmed:

'Who's there?'

'It's only me my dear.'

'What, you my husband! I did not expect—oh, I'm so glad you have come—I m in such dreadful pain—do run to the apothecary's shop for a little landanum, or paragoric or pe ppermint—oh, dear, quick, oh, oh, oh.

And the woman appeared in such agony the husband became alarmed, and quikly donning some of his attire again, he started without his coat, poste haste for the medicine.

Reaching the apothecary shop, he procured the curatives, and proceeded to pay for them when, on feeling in his pocket, he hauled out what he had at first considered a silver half, which proved to be a twenty dollar gold piece.

Wondering how such a sum of money came into his pocket, he delved again, and lo! another double eagle appeared; and again was the operation repeated, and again with similar results, so that he found himself the mysterious possessor of two hundred dollars in gold, when he thought he was not worth as many cents. We may as well hear state, in order to avoid any incongruity, that as our double eagles have lately appeared from the mint, this curious affair must have been of recent occurrence.

Pleased, gratified, yet nevertheless alarmed and astonished at this sudden windfall, our hero returned hurriedly to his domicil to dose his better half, and to acquant her with his most remarkable good fortune. Scarcely had he entered the room, however, before he found that his lovely wife had entirely recovered, and at the same time, the astounding fact was made known that he had on another man's pantaloons.

Almost paralized with this discovery, he yet managed to examine further; and discovered that his inexpressibles were missing, together with his coat; but in place of the latter, an elegant broadcloth garment was left, which from the amount of gilt buttons, and the particular devices upon them, rendered it pretty certain that the rightful owner belonged to Uncle Sam's naval service.

What transpired afterwards we do not know; but the net work of complicated circumstances, seem to point with irresistable force, to one of those acts of conjugal infidelity, with which the sense of the community is sometimes shocked.

Cure for Yellow Fever.

'Doctor,' said a dying man, opening his languid eyes, 'how long do you think I can live

'My poor friend,' said the physician, wiping the tears from his spectacles, 'I do not think that you can live more than twenty-four hours.'

'O, doctor,' exclaimed the dying man don't say that. But still, if I can't live, I suppose I must bend to the will of Providence.'

The sick man covered his face with the bed clothes, and the physician not being able to endure the scene, was about to depart when his patient called for him—'Doctor what do you think it will cost for my funeral?'

'My poor friend,' answered the humane physician with tears in his eyes, 'it will not cost much—probably not more than twenty-five dollars.'

The dying man started up in his bed, and raising his hands as though he was going to excise a ghost, exclaimed in the most pitiful tones.

'Oh, no, Doctor, don't say that. I can't afford to pay twenty-five dollars to be buried. It's higher than other people pay, and I can't afford it.'

So saying the young gentleman sunk back, and wept like Niobe. Although worth some four or five thousand dollars in solid cash, he couldn't afford to die, because the funeral would cost twenty-five dollars. The meanness of his disposition striking into his system, drove the fever out and he recovered.

Using up the Pig.

Coleridge declared that in Cologne he 'counted two-and-seventy stenches, all well defined.' How many he might have detected in Cincinnati, is a matter of curious conjecture. Although admirably suited for sewerage and abundantly wealthy, it is on a par with the old towns of Europe in the barbarian of open drains with undisguised tributaries from every yard and dwelling. Typhus and Cholera are there is in quariers nearer Bow bells, less dreaded than a little taxation. The population of Cincinati is said to be about 115,000, including, hrobably, the two villages on the opposite bank of the Ohio, which to all intents and purposes are part of it. Of this number nearly one third are Germans. In 1840 it was returned at a little over forty-three thousand! What crocodiles were in Egypt, what cows are in Bengal, or storks in Holland pigs' are here with this difference—their sacreduess of character last but as long as their mortal coil; and this is abbreviated without ceromony, and from the most worldly motives. In life the pig is free—is honored; he ranges the streets; he reposes in throughfares; he walks between your horses legs, or your own; he is every where respected; but let the thread of his exitstence be severed, and, shape of Mahomet! what a charge! They think, in Cincinnati, of making but the most of him. How many of this kind perish annually, to cement the vast prosperity of that city, cannot be told. About fifteen years ago, when it contained only one fifth of its existing population, a few bold speculators began the trade. Selecting the hams and sides of the animal, they made pickled pork; of the rest they took small account. Soon, however, the idea, occurred to one more accute than his fellows, that heads and feet—nay, even the spine and the vetebræ—might be turned to an account Trotters and cheeks had their partizans and these parts looked up in the market. About this time ths makers of sausages caught the inspiration; they found those luxuries saleable; and so many pigs were to be slaughtered, that the butchers were willing to do it for nothing; this is to say for the perquisite of the entrals and offal alone. The next step was due to the genius of France.

A French manufacturer established a brush manufactory in the Faubourg Marais, for the bristles; but his ingenity was outdone by one of his own countryman, who soon after arrived. This man determined it seems, to share the spoil; and, thinking nothing else left, collected the fine hair or wool, washed, dried and curled it But he was mistaken in thinking nothing else left. Little was done with the lard, they invented machines and squeeezed oil of it; the refuse war then thrown away. Mistaken men again! This refuse was the substance of stearine candles, and made a fortune to the discoverer of the secret. Lastly came one who could press chemistry into the service of mammon. He saw the blood of countless swine flowing through the gutters of the city; it was all that was left of them, but it went to his heart to see it thrown away. He pondered long; and then collecting the streams into reservoirs, made prussiate of potash from it by the ton. The pig was used up.

Pretty Hands.

'Delecate, beautiful hands! Dear Miss, how do you contrive to make your hands so pretty? And such rings, too, as if to draw attention that way.—Let us feel them. Oh, dear how soft and tender. Do you bake, Miss?'

'No.'

'Do you make beds?'

'No.'

'Do you wash floors and scrub the pots and kettles?'

'No.'

'So we thought. Look at your mother's hands. Ain't you ashamed to let the old lady kill herself outright, while you do nothing from daylight to dark, but keep the dust from your face and flies from your hands? A person who is a real man would prefer to see them blackened occasionally by comming in contact with pot hooks and trammels, and calloused by a day or two's rubbing at the washing board—Pretty fingers indeed! what are they good for but to move over a piano or stick through gold rings? Like many of the vain things of earth they are kept for show and nothing more. For our part, we would rather see them out in actual service, and as tough as a coquett's couscinee than so tender that a fly's foot will make an impression upon them.

Policy for Youug Ladies.

It is said 'there is policy in taking advantage of circumstances and turning them to the accomplishment of those objects one wishes to secure.' Policy is therefore for these young ladies who wish to secure good husbands. But the policy which most of them pursue is exceedingly erroneous; they seem to think that it is degrading to them to be seen in any ordinary dress a about their household affairs. But this is the very condition in which every young man, who is worth securing, would prefer to find them in if he were seeking a wife. A foolish simpering fop, who is more indebted to his tailor and barber, for importance, than to his brains, may wish to find ladies dressed in silk and shut up in the parlor like dolls in a show case. But a sensible man wants a wife who knows something and can make herself useful. A judicious writer advises all young men to seek their companions for life from the class who are willing to be found in the kitchen without making appologies for it. This is sage advice, and is young ladies who are worth their seeking generally act upon it, and had rather find them at the wash tub, than weeping over the last new novel,' they would not run away from their work and hide when a young man is approaching the house, as they often do. They would let him know that they are worth something more than mere playings; that they are not butterflies, very pretty to look upon, but if handled perish with the touch. Nothing recommends young lady like industry. To understand labor and to perform it well, is one of the finest qualifications. Ladies sho'd never be ashamed of being caught at work.

Olden Times in Massachusetts.

In 1627 there were but thirty ploughs in Massachusetts, and the use of these agricultural impliments were not familliar to all the planters. From the annels of Salem it appears that in that year it was agreed by the town to grant Richard Hutchinson twenty acres of land in addition to his share, on condition 'he set up ploughing.'

1630. A sumptuary act of the General Court prohibited short sleeves, and required the garments to be lengthened so as to cover the arms to the wrist, and required the reformation in immoderate great breeches, knots of riband, broad shoulder-bands and tayles; silk rosses, double cuffs and ruffs.

1647. The Court order, that if any young man attempt to address a young woman without consent of her parents, or in case of their absence, of the County Court, he shall be fined four pounds for the first offence, ten pounds for the second, and be imprissoned for the third offence.

1649. Matthew Stanley was tried for drawing in the affections of John Tarbox's daughter without the consent of her parents, convicted and fined fifteen pounds: fees two shillings five pence. Three married women were fined five shillings each for scolding.

1653 Jonas Fairbanks was tried for wearing great boots, but was acquitted.

Rise of Fashions.

Changes in fashions have generally arisen from peculiarities in the dress of some eminent personage to hide a defect; the homage of flatterers soon leades them to ape their masters and once adapted at court, the fashion soon becomes universal. The closely cropped heads of the reign of Francis I. of France was occasioned by a wound in the forehead which that prince received from a burning brand in the hands of the Count de Montgomery, and which forced him to have his hair cut short. The beautiful hair of Louis XIV. when a child, introduced the use of dorukes with long floating curls. The hugh wigs which succeeded those which were adopted by all Europe, but which have now become a mere apendage to the magistracy, were invented by a French barber to conceal a slight inquality in the shoulders of the Dauphin. Henry II, from a scar on his neck mounted the ruff; which the court ladies adopted but with excessive exaggration.—Charles VII, of France, introduced long coats to hide his ill shapped legs: and shoes with very long points, full two feet in length, were invented by the Duke of Arjou to conceal a large excrescence on one of his feet.

Religion.

He who holds all duties, that his moral sense imposes, as commands direct from God, and believes that moral laws are actually given by God; he has religeon; for as God is a moral being so can his laws be no other than moral laws; and as no hindrence can stand in the way of his will, then must that be, which he wills. Thus through him can nothing actually be otherwise than in accordance with natural morality. Man, therefore, with the greatest possible assurance, expects from religion all that by a great moral cause must be thought necessary, and supposes nothing and fears nothing which is against the moral order of things. True religion in the heart of man, is thus nothing else than faith in the reign of God. The firmer and stronger this belief in us is, the better established and stronger is our religion. But such a belief is grounded in our moral nature, and preceeds with the developement of itself, out from it. No scrutinizing analysis of the understanding, no learned demonstrations, can awaken, nourish and confirm it. Beneficent nature has not made so advantageous a gift, as religion to depend on brilliat talents, or on profound, cunningly acquired knowledge. She sunk the seed of it, together with the means of its fertilization, in the heart of each man, and made abundant arrangements to fructify and awaken it to an early germination.

As sure as virture dwells in the heart of man there also dwells true religion. A beautiful goddness! her face displays her intrinsic dignity; no glory encircles her hand; a little, but pure and clear light holds she in her hand, the flowery of her mother, Virtue. No dazzling ceremonialals tell you who she is; no court surrounds her; no priesthood, no princely throne, is erected for her protection. Her only temples are the hearts of good men; she becomes learned through reason and virtue. You know her by he serene, contented look she carries in the world, by the confidence with which she trust the future, by the courage with which she trusts the future, by the bourage with which she attemps the greatest dangers. In her you see no perverted eye, that turns aside from fair nature, to seek after transcedental experiences; no contempt for practical life, no ineffectual longing after the beenns that belong to a better world. With cheerful content she labors with all her might after the highest perfections of the earth, and awaits with the greatest confidence, from all disposing Goodness that which she cannot reach. See, how she inspires that pious man with courage against the evils he sees before him, and strengthens him in virtue.' There, Vice beckons him alluring Voluptuousness at his side, and offers him gold, orders, ribands and stars, that he has before him in abundance; the way to him, is strewed with flowers and beset with enrupturing enjoyments Here sits Virtue in tranquil sublimity, but stripped of all this worlds glory; resolute villains standing with drawn swords beset the way to her, and watch to corrupt him who would draw near her; and even envious Fate holds a great quiver with all sorts of weapons prepared against her, and stirs up lightnings and storms on the way to Virtue. But see the bold man hesitates not which way he shall take. The lovely glance of the sublime goddess has filled him with strength. With deep contempt he turns from the lure of Vice, and with high courage he seeks the society of virtue through mencing dangers around. Now the lightnings strike him; the storms upon him; murder falls upon him with inexorable rage;—he fights as a lion; Religion leaves him not. Now sinks he in deep night. Alas! is the noble one lost? No, see, there he goes forth in a new form. Every flash that struck him, hath tended to sublimate him; every sword stroke he received hath beautified him, hath tended to sublimate him; every sword-stroke he received, hath beautified him. Even the wicked are amazed at the divinity that looks forth from him. His fate becomes serene. In the arms of Virtue and Religion the hero prepares himself for yet greater deeds.

Thus true religion shows itself.

A Dutch "Spirit,"

A Dutch widower, out west, whose better half departed on the long journey to the spirit land some twelve months ago, determined, the other day, to consult the "Rappers," and endeavor to obtain a spiritual communication, feeling anxious respecting the future state of his wife. After the usual ceremonies, the spirit of 'Mrs. Hauntz' manifested by raps its willingness to converse with her disconsolate spouse.

'Ish dat yon, Mrs. Hauntz?' inquired the Dutchman,

'Yes, dearest, it is your wife, who——'

You lie, you tam tevil of a ffost, interrupted Hauntz, starting from his seat, 'mine frau speak notting but Dutch, and she never says 'tearest' in her life. It was always 'Hauntz you ttef!' or, 'Hauntz, you tirty skamp!' and the Dutchman hobbled from the room well satisfied that the 'rapping spirits' were all humbug, and that he was safe from any further communication with his shrewish frau on this earth.

A Sell.

Two gentlemen of no little note happened, in their rambles through Washington, to get pretty tight, as men are said to be when uncomfortably loose; and, in a very laudable effort to return to their hotel, blundered into the door of a room in which a steam engine had worked itself into a tolerable rage.

'Chu-chu-chu! phizz-z!' went the machine, while a great drum whizzed around most furiously, when one of them exclaimed;

'What's this?'

'A steamboat,' said the other.

'To be sure it is,' said the first; 'didn't I know that. Boy, what boat is this?'

'The Phœnix,' said the phonetic boy, speaking in two syllables.

'What's the passgae, boy?'

'One fifty,' said the knowing imp.

'Well, here's the money,' said the gentleman; 'show us our beaths.'

'Walk aft,' said the boy.

The gentlemen walked aft, and the boy walked forward, and s perhaps still doing so, with a cool "three in his pocket.'

Maxims,

Sir. W. Temple says, that the first ingredient in conversation is truth; the next, good sense; the third, good humor; and the fourth, wit.

Plato, speaking of passionate persons, says, They are like men who stand on their heads, they see all things the wrong way.

To think is the proper use of the mind, and it is astonishing to find how little this trite truth is recognized.

Winter, which strips the leaves from around us, makes, us see the distant regions they formerly concealed; so does old age rob us of our enjoyments, only to enlarge the prospect of the eternity before us.

He who commands himself, commands the world too; and the more authority you have over others, the more command you must have over yourself.

The influence which woman exerts is silant and still, felt rather than seen, not chaining the hands, but restraining our actions by gliding into the heart.

Enjoyment is more durable than pain. The one is like immortal firment the other the transient clouds which darken it for a time.

How much more might people accomplish, if they would but make it a point to carry out whatever they undertake.

A kind word will often tell more than the severst reproof, and a sigh of sorrow makes a far deeper impression than an open cesure.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, MAY 10th, 1851,

John A. Green, Editor,

"HARPER'S MAGAZINE."—We have received the May number of this work, which far surpasses any that has heretofore been issued. Its whole appearance is elegant; and it has a great number of beautiful engravings, which is not, nor the mechanical work, excelled by anything of the kind. We cheerfully recommend it to our patrons. They are for sale at the Quincy Book Store.

THE BEEBE HAT. All are admiring the beautiful hats obtained at Dimegan's extensive clothing warehouse in this town, from the fashionable New York hat cap and glove mart, of Wm. H Beebe, & Co. Their hats are the very "mold of form" that a gentleman of required taste would select at once from a thousand others, and then the materials are so excelent, the color so lasting and the finish so fine that they retain their "newly gloss" for a great length of time.

In years past we have editorially spoken of friend Beebe's hats, and have no doubt that for fashion and material the present season they are superior to any other manufactory.

☞Our readers are especially requested to notice the new cut of Mr. Geo. W. Pettes' Store, in Boston, at the corner of of Washington and Summer streets.

The establishment is one of the very largest in the New England States, and it is said by all who visit it, to turn out the very handsomest goods at the very lowest prices.

In 1836 the consumption of spirituous liquors, beer and wine, in the United States, was computed at six hundred and twenty three millions of gallons land in 1850, at five hundred and eighty-three millions of gallons a decrease in fourteen years of forty millions of gallons, notwithstanding the vast increase of population. This is encouraging to the friends of temperance.

A new ship on the stocks at East Boston has been named the "Astonisher," as emblematic of her size and speed. She will be the largest merchant ship in the world, of 2000 tons register. She will be launched with all despatch.

During the past two months the crime of murder has increased to an alarming extent in New York City. Cases of stabbing and shooting are becoming of almost daily occurance, and though, within a short time, the ignominious sentence of death has been passed upon three persons, the amount of crime, seems to increase, instead of diminishing.

The whole number of immigrants who have arrived at New York since January 1, is 66600—double the number which arrived during the corresponding period of last year. During the month of April the arrivals were 30,000 more than half being Irish.

The site for the monument to Capt. Isaac Davis Davis, in Acton, has been located by the committee chosen for that purpose, when his exellency, Gov. Boutwell, was present. We understand that the monument will be completed early in September, when the event will be celebrated with appropriate ceremonies.

Elder Brigham Young pledges his honor that he has only twenty-six wives! He is the saint upon whom fell the mantle of Joe Smith.

The Mayor of New York City granted 551 licenses during the past month, and renewed 146; the amount collected for them was $2,645 87; and for fines, $72 75.

There are but two millionaires in New York city William B. Astor, who owns $2,600,300, and whose taxes amount to $29 579,26; and Peter Lorrilard, whose property is set down at $1,169,900. Boston we believe, boasts of eight or ten millionaires some of whom are worth six millons and more.

Notice,

SEALED Proposals will be received until 12 o'clock noon, of the 17th, day of May, 1851, by the Governor of Massachusetts and a Committee of the Town Acton in said Commonwealth, for the construction of a Monument to the memory of Captain Isaac Davis, in the Town of Acton.

The plans and specifications of said monument may be seen at the State House, in Boston, and any information as to the material of which the same is to be built and the time of construction with all other particulars may be obtained from J. T WOODBURY a member of the House of representatives and of the Committee aforesaid, who will also receive proposals as aforementioned.

Said monument is to be built entirely of Granite with unhewn fronts, and it is thought that Granite suitable for the same may be found in abundance, not far from the spot, where the monument is to be built.

The proposals will be opened on Monday, the 19th, day of May, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at the Hotel in the middle of the Town of Acton, and the Committee reserve the right to reject any bid that may be received.

Fruit Trees.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE Proprietor is desirous of disposing of a large proportion of the FRUIT TREES in the Nurseries at Hawthorne Grove, Dorchester, Mass., with a view to improvements on the grounds the coming season.

The collection of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, and other FRUITS, embraces about every approved sort of American or Foreign extant, and is scarcely surpassed in excellence or variety.

SPECIAL CULTIVATION has been bestowed on the PEAR and many thousands of thrifty vigorous trees are ready for transplanting. EXTRA SIZE PEAR TREES, with fruit buds, either on quince or pear roots, such as will soon commence bearing, can be supplied at moderate prices.

Also, all the new varieties of PEARS, CHERRIES, PLUMS, etc., and at lower rates than is generally charged for novelties,

SCIONS for exportation and the home trade can be had from fruit-bearing trees thereby securing correctness of nomenclature

The Collection of Camelias, Roses, Dahilas, and Green-House Plants, is quite extensive—that of the Camelia consists of several thousands Plants, and embraces all the novelties extant.

SELECTIONS, where desired, founded on the experience of many years, will be made by the proprietor and which will seldom fail to please the correspondent

POETRY.

VESTA.

BY HON. H W. ELLSWORTH.

Round Vesta's temple famed of old,
Though many an eager foot-step pressed,
To one alone of heavenly mould
The mystic Goddess stood confessed
To Him each hidden charm was known;
High-Priest of Vesta! it was thine
To guard the deathless flame that shone
Throughout her temple's inner shrine!

The outer temple long hath gone,
And crumbled into sainted dust!
Yet still the goodness hath her throne,
The High-Priest still his sacred trust,
For what was Vesta but the flame
Of Holy Truth—the powers that stirs,
Still strong as when from Heaven it came,
The heart-pulse of her worshippers!

Thus us on our souls a hidden light,
Like some blest star of Heaven above,
Hath shone for years in radiance bright,
Beneath the ceaseless care of Love,
But who, amid the changing world,
Would dream the Boy such watch had kept,
That ne'er with weasied pinions furled,
On fleeting moment he hath slept!

O God! how glorious is Love!
Beyond what raptured bard hath sung,
When thus without one wish to rove,
The Seraph Boy, with bow unstrung,
And empty quiver, day and night
Sits watching with admiring gaze
Alone, the heart-consuming light
His power first kindled to a blaze.

Yet nor alone! for near him oft
Bright jewelled Memory fondly strays,
Recounting ne'r, in accents soft,
Each treasured hope of happier days,
And when mid. time's most rapid flight,
Glad Memory seeks some hidden path,
Love holds aloft the charmed light,
And lends him all the power he hath!

Thou art my Vesta! I have prayed
To none with such devotion as to thee;
E'en of my heart thine own a part is made,
Nor, could I loose it would set it free,
Still must I love, though Love may not avail
Perchance; yet sometimes in life's busy stir,
Whispers fond Hope the same enchanting tale,
That first she taught me as thy worshipper.

THE RETURN OF SPRING.

Dear as the dove, whose wafting wing
The green leaf ransomed from the main,
Thy genial glow, returning Spring,
Comes to our shores again;
For thou hast been a wanderer long,
On many a fair and foreign strand,
In balm and beauty, sun and song,
Passing from land to land.

Thou bring'st the blossoms to the bee,
To earth a robe of emerald dye,
The leaflet to the naked tree,
The rainbow in the sky.
I feel thy blest benign control
The pulses of my youth restore;
Opening the spring of sense and soul
To love and joy once more.

I will not people thy green bowers
With sorrow's pale and spectre band;
Or blend with thine the faded flowers
Of memory's distant land:
For thou wert surely never given
To wake regret from pleasures gone;
But like an angel sent from Heaven
To soothe creation's groan.

Then while the groves thy garlands twine,
Thy spirit breathes in flower and tree,
My heart shall kindle at thy shrine,
And worship God in thee,
And in some calm sequestered spot,
While listening to thy choral strain,
Past griefs shall be awhile forgot,
And pleasures bloom again.

ANECDOTES.

'James, now I will hear your lesson,' said a schoolmaster to a little urchin who was not in the habit of studying much. 'Guesth not, thir, papa thays that little boythis should be seen and not heard.'

I feel the burden of age upon me, as the boy said when his grandfather made him carry him through the mud.

One of the clowns at the National Circus, in a burlesque political speech, announces to his constituents—for he nominates himself as a candidate for the next Presidency—that he is in favor of abolishing flogging in the navy and introducing it into Congress. He thinks, by that means, sessions would be shortened, and consequently taxes lessened.

'I say, Mr. Highflier wont you let a fellow go with you in that ere balloon?'

'I could not possibly accommodate you, my dear friend.'

'Well, then, be kind enough to take my card along, for I am determined to get my name up some how or other.

'Mr. Smith,' said a little fellow the other evening to his sister's beau, 'I wish you wouldn't praise our Ann Maria's eyes any more. You've made her so proud now, that she wont speak to sister Mary, nor help mother the least bit.'

'Pa, isn't that man in what is called the spring of life?' why my son?' 'Because it is forward of the main hatch.

MISCELLANY.

Beat at His Own Game.

Not many years ago there was, and perhaps there is yet, a law in the state of Connecticut which sets forth that any person found driving upon the highway on Sunday should be fined ten dollars, the complainant to receive half the penalty. Now there never was a law devised, planned or laid down, but what some 'cute, individual will find a hole or flaw to crawl through it, whatever may be its 'tight fits,' or intricate details. But somebody must be caught, of course, and sometimes it does happen that the wary and wakeful get caught in the very trap set by themselves to allure or trip the unwary—hence my story.

It is now no longer, I believe, an unsolved question, but a fixed fact, that Yankees are cute if occasion require it. There is no question of it. When the Sunday Connecticut travelling, the summon bonum of which I have set forth, was in the flower of its bloom, one rainy, dirty, muddy Sunday, just such a day when both man and beast feel a strong inclination to lie back in some dry place, and chew the sweet cud of fancy, as it may be, a live and veritable specimen of genus gen gese (the latter phrase is aboriginal, I believe), was to be seen without charge, 'in the very act of violating the King's law;' or that of the Commonwealth of Connecticut, driving an old wagon and an old grey mare upon the highway! If he did not know the law he was not long learning it, for a Connecticut man, who, perhaps, not having the fear of God before his eyes so clearly as he had in his heart the idea of making five dollars out of the lone traveler, ran out of his dry domicil by the road side, and exclaimed:

'Hallo! there mister!'

'Certain, squire,' said the Yankee, 'wo, Sook, heold on ye, fool ye, woo! Mornin,' Squire, what's the neuse? Haint got the collery down this way, tew, I hope? Dien like sixty in York with it.'

'No friend said,' the man, 'we haint got no cholera down here, but I guess you don't know we have got a law what fines people that drive on the King's highway on the Lord's day.'

'Dew tell,' said he in the little wagon—'well I should'nt wonder if you had an—'

'And I shall arrest you, friend, for breaking the law.'

'I want to know, now? Well, Squire, I can't help it; you see, in fact, I am in the alfiredest hurry to get hum; I hev been thar in New York, 'bout two weeks among the dead and dy—'

'What? with thee—'

'Collery, collery, squire. It's carryin' 'em off by hull wagon loads. (The squire's eyes dilated). I got a good job at haulin' the dead in my wagon to Potter's field—'

'What, this wagon?'

'Zactly, squire. it paid well, (the squire's cheek grew a little paler), and I held on till day'fore yesterday; I felt it comin on me and I started for hum.'

'Friend,' said the squire, 'it's seven miles to M——town, and—

'But I say, squire, I'm despirit ill—sick as a dog; can't you let me put up with you until—'

'No, no, no, no, no, go on; you'll soon get to M——town, and—'

'But you aint agoin to let a feller die in this are kind a way?'

'Drive on, drive on, friend, don't stop a minute,' and the old fellow stepped off as fast as he could toddle from the peddler's pest wagon.

'Hallo! Squire!' roarked the Yankee, heow about the fine?'

'Do——blast you and the fine too; drive off!' shouted the old fellow, and on went the Yankee, showing a set of ivories to the drizzly day, which was enough to set a dentist in ecstacies.

'Go ahead, Soak; guess that feller wont stop tradin' folks soon again; hoo! hoo! gin him a reg'lar ager fit.'

But the pedler had not made many miles before he was again hailed, and by an absolute constable, who, ex-officio, soon brought up the old mare and her driver to a dead halt. It would not go down, perhaps, so well with this customer, thought the pedlar, to try the cholera game with him, so he thought he'd try a new dodge.

'Well, haint no objection to pay the fine, for I was determined to get it to M——town today, rain or shine, and my old mare is nigh 'beout givin' eout.'

'Well,' said the officer, 'drive ahead, it is only three miles to M——; I'll go down with you.'

'Thank yeou. Spose you ride a bit, mister, I'm pesky tired settin,' so ef you'll jest get in and drive along I'll walk a spell.'

The Yankees got out into the road, and the constable got in, glad to quit the mud and rain for so comfortable a place, and on they went.

As you get near M——there is plenty of houses along the road, and many ran out see who on earth it was profaning the Sabbath and breaking the law by driving a yellow covered pedlar's wagon in the very face of open day.—Seeing it was their constable, the folks were at a dead loss to comprehend the matter, and let him drive on without interruption. The roads being heavy and the old mare in the last stages of done out, the wagon pulled rather tediously along, while the bona fide owner, long limbed, long winded, and light of foot reached M——some twenty minutes before the officer and proscribed wagon came up. Pushing into the first tarven at hand, the pedlar called for the landlord and wanted to know if it was not against the law to drive a wagon on Sunday. Being well assured by Boniface of the fact, he requested him to step out and see a man in the act.

'Why, bless my soul, that's Mr. M——, our constable?'

'Tis?' said the pedlar, 'well, now, I'd call him a purty feller, tew; the constable breaking the laws all to smash on a Sunday. But he is at it, aint he, landlord?'

'It is a fact: here he comes sure enough.'

'Well, I reckon there's something to be made here,' said the pedlar, 'so I'll just shear the fine with you, landlord, if you'll show me where the squire lives.'

'Oh, I'm justice here myself,' said the landlord.

'Dew tell? Well, then, we'll soon fix that constable.'

Up drove the constable, and jumping out, he handed the lines to the hostler, and told him to put the mare up.

'Why, you beat me here, my friend,' said he.

'Guess I hev,' said the pedlar.

'Well, as it is Sunday,' said the officer, 'and near night, we'll let the mare lay over until morning; I'll take care of the mare and wagon.'

The pedlar had no objections—so it did lay over until morning, when bright and early the constable found himself fined ten dollars and costs for violating the Sunday travelling law. The officer grinned and squirmed, but as the case was made out as clear as day, there was no dodging it, and that the community (especially) learned that Yankee pedlars, like edged tools, must be handled carefully.

Kicking a Yankee.

A very handsome friend of ours, says the St. Louis Reveille, who a few weeks since was poked out of a very comfortable office up the river has betaken himself to Bangor a while, to recover the wound inflicted upon his feelings by our unprincipaled and immolating administration.

Change of air must have had instant effect upon his spirits, for, from Galena he writes us a very interesting letter, which among other things tells of a desperate quarrel that took place on board the boat between a real live dandy tourist, and a real live Yankee settler. The latter trod on the toes of the former, whereupon the former threatened to 'kick out of the cabin' the latter.

'Yon'll kick me out of the cabin!'

'Yes, sir, I'll kick you out of this cabin.'

'You'll kick me, Mr. Hitchcook, out of this cabing!'

'Yes, sir, I'll kick you, Mr. Hitchcook!

'Wall, I guess,' said the Yankee very cooly, after being satisfied that it was himself that stood in such imminent peril of assult. 'I guess, since you talk of kicking, you never heard me tell about old Bradley and my mare there at home?'

'No, sir, nor do I wish——'

'Wall, guess it won't set you back much any how, as kicking is best to be cousidered on. You see, old Bradley is one of those sanctimoneous, longfaced old hypocrites who put a religious suit on every Sabbath morning, and with a good deal of screwing manage to keep it on till after chuch in the afternoon. Wall, he had an old roan mare that would jump over any sixteen rail fence in Illinois, and open any barn door that hadn't a padlook on it. Two or three times I found her in my stable, and I told Bradley about it, and he was sorry—an unruly animal—would watch, and a hull lot of things, all said in a serious manner, with a face as long as Deacon Farar's on a sabbath day. I knew all the time he was lying, and so I wathed him and his old roan tu, and for three nights regular old roan came to my stable about bed-time and just about daylight old Bradley would come bridle her and ride her off. I then just took my old mare down to the blacksmith's shop and had some shoes made with corks, and about four inches long, and had em nailed to her hind feet. Your heels, mister aint nothing to 'em.

'I took her hum, and gave her about ten feet of halter, and tied her right in the centre of the stable, fed her well with oats about nine o'clock and taking a good smoke went to bed, knowing that my old mare was a true telling animal, and she'd give a good report of herself in the morning. I wasn't fairly asleep before the old oman hunched me, and wanted to know what on earth was the matter out at the stable. Says, I, go to sleep, Peggy; its nothing but Kate—she's kicking the flies, I guess. Purty soon she hunched me again and says she, Mr. Hitchcock, du get up and see what is the matter with Kate.' 'Lay still, Peggy, Kate will take care of herself, I guess.' Wall, the next morning, about daylight, Bradley, with his bridle in his hand, cum to the stable, and as true as true as the book of Genesis, when he saw the old roan's sides, head and stern, he cursed and swore worse than you did, mister, when I cum down on your toes.

'After breakfast, that morning, Joe Davis cum to my house, says he;

'Bradley's old roan is nearly dead—she's cut to pieces and can scarely move.'

'I want to know,' says I, 'how on airth did it happen?'

'Now whilst we were talking up cum that everlasting hypocrite, Bradley and says he, 'Mr. Hitchcock, my old mare is ruined!'

'Du tell,' says I.

'She's cut to pieces,' says he; 'do yon know whether she was in your stable last night?'

'Wall. mister, with with this I let out out; 'Do I know it?' The Yankee here in illustration, made a sudden advance upon the dandy, who made wry for him, uncousciously as it were. 'Do I know it you no souled squash headed night owl, you!—you hay hookin, corncribbin, fodder-fudgin, cent-shavin, whitlin of nothin, you!—Kate kicks like a mere dumb beast, out I've reduced the thing to a science!'—The Yankee had not ceased to advance or the dandy in his retreat; and now the motion of the latter being accelerated by an apparent demonstration to suit the action to the word, he found himself in the 'social hall,' tumbling backwards over a pile of baggape, and tearing the knee of his pants as he scrambled up, a perfect scream of laughter, stunning him from all sides. The defeat was total a few moments after he was seen dragging his trunk ashore while Mr. Hitchcook finished his story on the boiler-deck.

I-I-I Scream.

At the corner of Fulton and Nassau street, sits a black fellow with an enormous mouth and strong luugs bawling Ice-cream loud enough to be heard a mile. His voice is peculiarly harsh and shrill, and he pronounces the words so, that one would suppose instead of notifying for sale the cool and duclet article which composes the stock in trade, he was screaming for screaming's sake. Thus—I-I-Iscream! I-I-Iscream!'

This peculiarity of screaming ice-cream, leads to some very amusing observations of the passers by, as well as to some little trouble and vexation to the African screamer.

'Confound you! I think you do scream,' said Charley McQuiz, as he stoped to see what sort of a throat it could be that sent forth such sounds.

'I-I-I-scream! I-I-I-scream!' repeated the negro.

'Well, rot you! don't know it!' said Charley, 'I heard you scream a mile off.'

'Buy some I-scream, Massa?'

'Buy it! no, you fool—you think I'll buy your screaming, when I can get more than I want of it for nothing?'

'No Masa; I neber sells I-scream for nossin Can't possibly 'ford it.'

'Can't afford it!' why, its costs you nothing except breath—and that is as cheap as shingle nails at three-pence a yard.'

'Yes, Massa, but consider, besides de breff dere is so much money to pay for stock and trade—so much money for rent—'

'Rent! why, Tony, your own rents will more than cover those due your landlord.'

'My rents! my, you must be jokin, massa—I got no rents!'

'Then my eyes deceive me, Tony. However, here's a shilling for you to buy new breath, in case your present one should ever fail—of which I fear there is no prospect.'

'Thankee you, massa, hopes for your cons'ant custom. I-I-I-cream!'

'Confound you! don't scream any more, if you don't want my fist run down your throat.'

'No want him in your throat! then keep your throat shut, till I get out of hearing—don't you scream again, till I'm a mile off.'

'I see you furder first, and den I won't.'

With this assurance, Charley went on, and Tony kept his mouth shut until he had doubled the first corner, when he began repeating as loud as ever—'I-I-I-cream!'—and so he continues screaming every evening.

Deacon Slow.

Deacon Slow had three sons—it is unnecessary to mention his daughters—who were, as deacon's sons are apt to be—the duce can only tell why—very roguish. They were in the habit of pokin fun at an old ram, who endeavored to make his share of the sport, by butting them over, a kind of fun which he often manifested a disposition to play off upon the Deacon, as he marched down to salt the flock—for these were duties which he paid strict attention, as he was exceedingly humane, except when he was very wroth, on which occasions his anger would burn like a furnace seven times heated. Now the Deacon's sheep pasture was upon the Shawsheen river, which is narrow but deep, and the pasture terminating in a precipice which rose fifteen feet above the water and shelved over it, as a beetle-browed-house hangs over a narrow street; and the boys, after they had exhausted all other fun upon the ram, were in the habit of squatting upon the edge of the precipice, and darting a hat at him, upon which he would come with blind fury threat. The boy who held the hat could easily leap aside, and the exasperated ram was quickly cooled by a plunge headlong down the precipice, into the stream. At this they were on day caught by the deacon, their father, who took them into a thicket close by and anointed their backs thoroughly with the oil of birch—an excellent application in such cases made and provided. It is not effectual however, and in this case the disease was not cured, as the boys were a few days after waiting round the place in order to repeat the joke upon the unsuspecting and innocent ram; but on beholding their father at a distance with his basket of salt, they hid in the thicket which they had so good occasion to remember. Slowly came Deacon Solomon Slow, and after he had scattered his salt, he stood upright and thought within himself, that it would be amusing to see the ram bolt over the precipice into the river. He saw no one nigh, how should he when the boys were hid in the bushes? and taking off his broad-brimed hat, he made demonstrations, which at once attracted the notice of the lord of the flock, who set out as usual in full speed. The deacon had squatted close to the edge—and, as he saw the ram bounded along, he pictured out to his fancy, for Deacons have fancy, the ridiculous figure the silly sheep would, make, bounding with a splash into the water—he began to smile—the ram at last came close, on a fierce charge, more enraged as the hat was larger than common—the deacon grinned outright, but in the midst of his delight, and the ram's ridiculous appearance, he forgot to jump aside, and the beast butted him over with a splash into the water where he meant the silly ram should have gone. The boys ran out clapping their hands and shouting 'you've got it dad,' in all the estacy of revenge. Deacon Solomon Slow crawled out from his bath with a visage longer than he had ever worn before. This was his last smile. He was afterwards called Deacon Solomon by his neighbors, among whom he lived and died at a venerable old age.

Moving.

There is an old song—and a funny one too, as we remember it,—the burden of which is, 'Keep moving.' The sentiment seems a very proper one to the vicissitudes of town life, though, considered as an imperative injunction it is certainly rather superfluous. To 'keep moving' is the misfortune of vast numbers of unhappy people during the whole period of their moral career. For ourself, rather than 'keep moving,' we should much prefer to 'take a seat'—like a member of Congress; 'keep stationary'—like a bookseller.

"Of moving accidents by flood an field," we have had more than enough—in the shape of broken crockery, cracked veneering, tarnished varnish, and damaged tempers. O, the miseries of picking up, and 'packing off!'—but O, the tortures of unpacking!—when you discover the secret of the porter's vouted economy of time and space, and withdraw (horresco referens!) your cream jar from the soap-barrel,—your looking-glasses from the kettle-box, and your linen from the stove-pipe; We can't go on, for fear of going off—in a passion, or an omnibus, with no reasonable prospect of ever, getting back again. We can stand lying like a jury—but we can't stand 'moving.' However, there is no chance for escape. Life is a 'moving scene,' throughout,—and one dies only to 'move' again—to a narrow house—a little more decently and quietly than before, and, it is consoling to reflect, for the last time.—Carpet Bag.

The Last Words of the Presidents.

When Washington was sixty-seven years old he said upon his death-bed, 'I find that I am dying said he, 'my breath cannot last long.'—And again, 'Doctor, I die hard, but I am not afraid to go; I believed, from my first attack, I should not survive it; my breath cannot last long.' And so he ceased to breathe.

More than a quarter of a century elapsed before a similar scene was witnessed. Then on the same day, the jubilee of the nation, Adams, at ninety years of age, and Jefferson at eighty-three, came down to their last hour.—'I resign myself to my God,' said Jefferson, and 'my child to my country.' Soon after Adams exclaimed, independence forever!' and all was over. They, too, had ceased to breathe,

Five years after this, at seventy-one years of age, Monroe, ceased to breathe.

Five years after this at seventy-one years of age, Madison ceased to breathe.

Nearly five years after this, at sixty-eight years of age, Harrison remarked: 'Sir I wish you to understand the true priaciples of Government; I wish them carried out; I ask nothing more.' And he ceased to breathe.

Four years after this, at sixty-eight years of age, Jackson observed in substance: 'My sufferings though great, are nothing in comparison with those of my dying Saviour, through whose death I look for everlasting happiness.—And he ceased to breathe.

In about five years after this, at, eighty-seven years of age, the second Adams declared:—'This is the last of earth; I am content.' And he ceased to breathe.

The lamented Taylor, at sixty-five years of age, submitted to the solemn decree. 'I am ready for the summons,' said he; I have endeavored to do my duty. I am sorry to leave my friends.' And he ceased to breathe.—Tioga, (N. Y.,) Eagle.

Marshall Tukey of Boston.

Dickens says that our country abounds in remarkable men. This intened slur expressed nothing more than the truth, and of all the men we have ever met, we consider Marshal Tukey one of the most remarkable. A few years ago he was the keeper of a bakery in Salem, then at Charlestown and finally in Boston; but becoming tired of city life, he resolved to move out to Cambridge and open an oyster saloon. Going out to that city one day for the purpose of hiring a suitable room, he strayed about the college grounds, and finally out of curiosity, he entered the library of Dane law college. He gazed upon the busts of all the most eminent layers and jurists of our country; he saw numbers of studets poring over books, while others were discussing knotty law points, and a new idea entered his head. His ambition was set on fire, and he resolved on the spot instead of opening a saloon to spend all he was worth in an attempt to fit himself for the practice of law. He requested a studant to show him the private study of the law instructors. This was done, and he was introduced to Prof. Greenleaf, to whom he explained his situation and his desires, at the same time asking his advice. Mr. Greenlief urged him at once to enter the law school. In three years he graduated from the law department of Harvard University with high honors. After a short and successful practice of the law in Boston, he received the appointment of City Marshel, with a salary of two thousand dollars, we belive. He is pronounced the ablest chief of police they have ever had in that city, and is unquestionably one of their most useful city, officers. We should not be surprised, at any time to hear of his appointment to a much higher office.—Gardnier (Me.) Transcript.

Big Stories.

A company of great story tellers had assembled one evening in the bar-room of a tavern out west, and some astonishing narratives—real 'whappers'—had been given for sure facts. At length when the imaginations of these tales began to fail them, somebody called on a quiet young man, who sat gravely in the corner, for his story.

'Oh,' said he candidly, 'I haven't anything to say, I might tell a story, but nothing to compare with what had just been told.'

Howevever the company insisted, and the young man began—

'The adventure I am about to relate is somewhat singular, but it will not surprise you after what you have heard. I was once skating on a very smooth and extensive field of ice, and having excellent skates on my feet I almost flew, indeed, with so great velocity, that I did not see an air hole which lay in my way, but dropped in to it, like a bar of lead' and had my head shaved clean off my shoulders by the sharp ice.'

This assertion made a great laugh, and some one asked the young man, how many times his head would bear shaving off.

'Hear me out out,' he said, gravely. 'You remember I said I was going very swiftly, and and that the day was exceedingly cold. My body then with its acquiesed velocity went under the ice as fast as my head moved over it, and coming to another air-hole up popped my body, and down dropped my head, and froze in the exact position I would have desired. So, you see, I had my head cut off and put on again without the least exertion on my part.'

'Lucky!'

'But this is not the end of my adventure. On my return home, I sat by the fire relating my wonderful escape, when my neck beginning to thaw, I undertook to blow my nose, and threw my head—chuck!—behind the back log!

'And what then?'

'Nothing,' repeated the narrator, gravely feeling of his neck, 'only my head, I believe hasn't stuck quite as well since!'

It is needless to say that this was the last big story told that night in the country tavern. Star Spangled.

How to Make Room in a Crowd.

A rich and influential citizen of Hartford

Ct., who is guilty of a little darker skin than his brethren, happened to be present in New York City, on the occasion of a great public meeting on the Battary at which the celebrated Black Hawk, then on his tour throughout the country, was to make a speech. Colodel P——and his friend P——, also a citizen of Hartford, walked down to the Battery, but found the crowd so large and dense, that they could not gain a position within hearing distance of the stand erected for the speakers. After some deliberation, the Colonel proposed returning to the hotel, but his friend demurred. 'I can manage, with your permission, Colonel, to get a seat for each of us upon the platform.

'How can that be done? I cant hardly push my case into the crowd, and how shall we affect an entrance with our bodies?'

I'll tell you, Colonel. Just let me announce you as Black Hawk, and we shall be ushered directly into the inner circle. Only a little Indianity, you know. What say you?'

'Agreed—but we must make our onset from another point.'

They passed round to other side, near the entrance from Broadway, and the Colonel removed his hat, and assumed an air of abrigiual dignity while his friend P—— ried in an exceeding loud voice.

'Room ge tlemen! Make way for the chief. —Black Hawk?'

There was a buzzing in the crowd, and in an instant it seperated on either hand, under P—'s waving cane, like the waters of the Red Sea, under the rod of Moses.

The Colonel and P——walked along the line true, hardly able to meet, with becoming gravity the curious gaze of thousands of eyes—but their object was accomplished—they obtained eligible seats and the nickname of 'Black Hawk' still sticks to Colonel P——, President of the——Bank, Hartford Co.—Yankee Blade.

Anecdote of a Dog.

A friend who has been spending the winter in Halafax, N. S. tells the following anecdote of a dog which is about the best story of canine sagacity that we ever heard. Tige is a splendid New Foundland, and possesses good sense as well as good looks. He is in the habit of going every morning with a penny in his mouth, to the same butcher's shop and purchasing his own breakfast, like a gentlemanly dog as he is. But it so happened upon one cold morning during the past winter, the shop was closed, and the necessity seemed to be imposed upon Tige either to wait for the butcher's return or look for his breakfast elsewhere. Hunger probably constrained him to take the latter alternative, and off he started for another butcher's shop, nearest to his favorite resort. Arriving there, he deposited his money upon the block, and smacked his chops for breakfast, as usual; but the butcher, instead of meeting the demand of his customer as a gentleman ought, brushed the coin into the till and drove the dog out of his shop. Such disgraceful proceedings on the part of a man, very naturally ruffled the temper of the brute; but as there was no other alternative, he was obliged to submit. The next morning, however, when his master furnished him with the coin for the purchase of breakfast, as usual, the dog, instead of going to the shop where he had been accustomed to trade, went immediately to the shop from whence he was so unceremoniously ejected the day before, laid his penny upon the block, and with a growl, as much as to say, 'you don't play any more tricks upon travellers,' placed his paw upon the penny. The butcher, not liking to risk under such a demonstration, the perpetration of another fraud, immediately rendered him the quid pro quo, in the shape of a slice of meat, and was about to appropriate the penny, as he had done the day previous, to his own coffers; but the dog, quicker than he was, made away with the meat at one swallow, and, seizing the penny again in his mouth, made off to the shop of his more honest acquaintance, and by the purchase of a double breakfast, made up for his previous fast.

Ingenuity of Parison Thieves.

Two well dressed persons stopped, one evening, before the shop of a grocer, at Bercy, and burst into loud laughter.

'I tell you that I will do it,' said one.

'I'll bet you five francs you do not,' said the other.

'Done; I take the bet.'

Both then entered the shop.

'Do you sell treacle?' said the first.

'Yes, gentlemen,' said the grocer,

'Give me two pounds of it.'

'Have you vessels to put it in?'

'No; but put it here'

'What, in your hat?'

'Put it in—it's for a wager.'

The grocer took the hat, placed it in the scale, and much amused at the idea, poured into it two pounds of treacle.

'There's the money,' said the purchaser, and he threw down a five franc piece. The grocer began to count the change, when the man said:

'Pardon me, sir, but your treacle has a queer smell.'

'It's very good, I assure you.'

'No—smell you.'

The grocer put down his head to the hat, and at the same moment the customer, by a rapid movement, thrust the man's head into the hat, and as the grocer instinctively raised his head, the customer knocked the hat over his eyes. The other man then plunged his hand into the till, and seized a handful of money—about thirty francs. Both got clear off before the unfortunate grocer could give the alarm.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, MAY 17th, 1851.

John A. Green, Editor.

GREEN PEAS. J. W. Wills of Charleston, (S. C.) forwarded to his friends in this place, the present week, a liberal supply of green peas, fully grown, and they were delicious to the taste. Many thanks are extended to him for his kindness and attention.

This rarity was served at the Hancock House on Wednesday last, which has recently been opened in splendid style by Geo. H. French.

SHOP BREAKING. The clothing store of John Russell, in the Town Hall building, was forcibly entered last Monday night, and robbed to the amount of several hundreds of dollars. It is thought that the goods have been found in New York city.

THE GREAT JUBILEE PICTORIAL.—We have received from Wilson & Co., New York, the pictorial double Brother Jonathan for 4th, July, 1851. It is really a beautiful and interesting sheet, and worthy to commemorate the Anniversary of our freedom. The historial document, by Cooper, of Columbus's discovery of America is illustrated with appropriate Engravings. The Boston Tea Party is detailed in full, and accompanied by a large and spirited picture of throwing the tea overboard from the ship Dartmouth in Boston harbor. There are likewise forty or fifty engravings illustrating fun and adventure on the Fourth. In a word, there is an abundance of matter for mirth and for reflection—just suited to the approaching national holiday. Price 12 cents only, or ten for one dollar.

SUMMER HATS. The attention of that part of the public, who are in want of a Hat of any description, will do well to call at Israel W. Monroe's, who has a fresh supply viz: Leghorn, Chip and Palmleaf, which are very handsome, and are sold at the lowest prices.

ANOTHER RAILROAD ACCIDENT. Telegraph to New York papers state that the freight train ran over and completely cut in two a deaf and dumb idiot, about four miles from Hornellsville, N. Y., As the accident occurred after night fall, no blame can be attached to the engineer.

JENNY LIND MARRIED. The Herald helps on a rumor that Jenny Lind is married to Bettelti The story has been exploded once or twice before, but this time the ceremony is said to have taken place at Havanna.

QUICK PASSAGE. The shortest passage to California has been accomplished by a Boston built vessel, named the Surprise, in ninety-six days from Boston to San Francisco.

By latest advices, we learn that the overland route to California is less dangerous now, than it used to be; the Camanches, Pawnees, and Apaches are at peace with the whites; the last named tribe had concluded a treaty with Col. Calhoun, commandant at Santa Fe.

About six rods of the Erie Railroad track sunk at Andover, N. Y., on the 29th ult. There was an engine on the track at the same time, which went down with it, and nothing but the top of the smoke chimney of the engine remains in sight. There was no indication previous to this of a defective bottom.

A planter named Clanton, in Providence parish La., was killed in his bed, a short time since, by two of his own negroes, who afterward carried his body out to a field, and burnt it on a log heap. The neighbors made them confess the deed, and then hung them to a tree.

A fugitive slave case was brought before a judge at San Francisco, March 30, but had not been decided. The slave was was brought to California by his Mississippi master, and there left the latter, and claims his freedom.

Bristol Bill, now in the Vermont State Prison, engaged in the manufactory of scythe snaths, is said to be in excellent health, and the wardner of the prison says he is just about the best, the smartest, and most diligent workman in the prison.

There was a violent storm and gale at Buffalo, on Thursday. The water in the harbor was raised about three feet above its ordinary level, and much damage was done to the shipping.

A couple were recently married in Dover, N. H. who had not seen each other until five minutes the ceremony. They had formed an acquaintance, by writing, about a fortnight previous. 'Well in haste —repent at leisure.'

Hon Howell Cobb has declined a public dinner at Savannah.

The New Orleans papers of the 5th complain of thunder storms and drenching rains.

The amount of U. S. Stock issued to foreigners last week was $47,200.

POETRY.

THE GENIAL SEASON.

The roll of each successive year
Impresses the bitter truth,
That life at best is a journey drear,
Save a few green spots in youth.

Oh! the boon of love was surely placed
In this world of pain and woe,
To give a fleeting raptured taste
Of heaven here below.

Then banish sorrow and be gay,
Ere the heart has lost its light,
And the joys of youth shall fade away
In the gloom of age's night,

For each successive fleeting year
Impresses another truth,
Namely—that we while stationed here
Should do it in our youth,

Carpet Bag.

NATURE'S LESSON.

When the Summer days are dying,
When the Autumn winds are sighing,
And the storm-clouds fast are flying
O'er the sky,
Comes a voice for e'er repeating—
"Know O man that time is fleeting,
That thy heart must cease its beating,
Thou must die."

Yes, O man! with thee 'twill be
As the sere leaf from the tree
Falling, lying noiselessly
In the tomb;
Many a one hath carless passed
O'er the dried leaves falling fast,
Never dreaming of his last
Awful doom.

And 'tis thus the world will tread
O'er the cold and narrow bed,
Where the silent slumb'ring dead,
Have been laid;
Sorrow shall not dim the eye,
Nor the breast heave forth a sigh
As the crowd goes rushing by Undismayed.

Soon again another race
Will have tak'en the old one's place,
Soon new leaves will bloom a space,
To the eye—
Would! then, man that thou wouldst heed
Lessons that the seasons read,
Still repeating as they speed—
Thou must die.

SONG.

BY W. J SMITH'

Oh! happy are our early years,
When sorrow ne'er oppress us
When all around a brightness wears,
And peace and joy do bless us;
When love and innocence do dwell
Within the childish breast,
And cares that soon a tale will tell
Are quitely at rest.

Oh! joyful are our early years,
Those years that quickly fly,
When nature loviest appears,
And life breathes not a sigh;
No dark forebodings then do come
To mar the passing day,
Nor shrouded in the folds of gloom
Is o'er our future way.

Sweet are indeed our early years,
Depresilen is unknown,
And buried deep are sorrows tears,
No seeds of discord sown;
It is indeed the golden age,
Nought with it will compare,
In life it is the brightest page,
For all is then sincere.

Oh! could we but recall again
The joyous days of youth,
When sweet affections only reign,
Unsilloped is truth;
When all around a brightness wears,
And future hopes are fair,
What will compare with early years
For happiness is there?

SPARK FROM THE CHELSEA TELEGRAPH

There was a tall young Irishman
A working on the mash,
He took six oysters from their bed
And stove them all to smash!
But ah! there came a constable,
Armed with a woeful writ,
Who took him up to Justice Gould, and that's the last we heard of it?

ANECDOTES.

A genius down west has discovered a method of manufacturing from one dandy, a monkey, an ape, three baboons, and some sap, so as to have enough left for a small yellow dog.

We would advise said yankee to come this way. Here he will find a large and constantly increasing supply of the raw material, at terms defying competition.

A fellow passed through town, a few days since, so all fired green that a cow jumped from its enclosure, and followed him several miles, thinking him a vegetable production.

Steve says that sacks are going to be fashionable this season as he knows several young gentleman who have got one lately.

Hope gallops—consideration ambles—and doubt trots.

BOSTON MUSEUM,

Tremont Street,.....Boston.

ALWAYS OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than

SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,

to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated

PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,

swelling the already immense collection to upwards of

HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,

the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely

NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,

ONE HUNDRED FEET in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to

Mock Reality,

and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of

CHRIST'S LAST SUPPER

with his Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.

THE PRODIGAL SON,

returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of

THE CRUCIFIXION,

composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.

Christ Disputing with the Doctors;

a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,

in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

THE SIAMESE TWINS,

and their beautiful American wives.
Representation by nine figures, of the

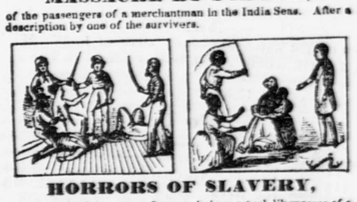
of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.



HORRORS OF SLAVERY,

as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.

MURDER OF MISS McCREA,

by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.

INTEMPERANCE,

and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.

Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of

One Hundred of Cabinet Size,

rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. The entire of the above, and the immense collection of

BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,

obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,

OIL PORTRAITS

of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;

EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,

and ancient Sarcophagi, 3000 Years old; and an entire

Family of Peruvian Mummies;

the DUCK-BILLED PLATYPUS, the connecting link between the BIRD and BEAST, being evidently half each;—the curious half-fish, half-human

FEJEE MERMAID,

which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, in the years 1840, '41, and '42, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;

Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;

ANIMALS and BIRDS of every nation; Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious

SAW AND SWORD FISH,

all in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unequalled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

In Addition to which, and

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,

visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent

THEATRICAL ENTERTAINMENTS,

given EVERY EVENING, and WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, by a Company of Comedians and an Orchestra of Musicians, admitted to be SUPERIOR to any ever before collected in this country, with the aid of

Stage and Scenic Arrangements,

the most grand and superb ever seen in either Europe or America! thus warranting the universal admission that the Boston Museum, besides being the most comfortable and genteel, is also the

Cheapest Place of Amusement

IN THE WORLD! A single visit will prove the truth of this assertion, as the admission is only

The little girl took her penny and prayed thus for a blessing;

'Oh, take this penny, Lord, altho not worthy to give it, and bless it, will do good to the poor heathen.' ing from her knees, she took it to th and gave it as we said.

Reader, bear in mind, it is not wh but how we give, that makes the serv table. The poor widow's mite was more precious than the great man's Christ; and your single penny will b greater value, and perhaps do more g many pounds wrongly presented, if o in the exercise of faith and love.

MISCELLANY.

The Two Givers.

A collection for foreign missions was made at a church door. Up walked the richest man in the congregation, and laid a five pound note on the plate. The people admired the gift and praised the giver, but it gave no joy in heaven. Directly after him there came a little, pale girl meanly clad, and poverty written out in all her looks, yet with a countenance full of sweetness, and a tear trembling in her eye, and laid beside the rich man's note a single penny. The crowd dashed her rudely by. No one noticed or cared for her gift. But Jesus and his angels accepted it, as far more precious than the rich man's note.

You will ask how came this difference?

That same morning the rich man had said within himself, 'What shall I give to the collection to-day, for foreign missions? I must give a five-pound note, for I wish my donation to be above all the others.'

That same morning the little girl had been reading her Bible, and she thought within herself, 'If Jesus did so much for me, Oh! what can I do to show my love to him? There is to be a collection for missions this day, and I have only a penny; but I will give it for Jesus' sake, and it may be he will accept it from me, for I love him very much.'

The little girl took her penny and kneeling, prayed thus for a blessing;

'Oh, take this penny, Lord, although I am not worthy to give it, and bless it, so that it will do good to the poor heathen.' Then rising from her knees, she took it to the church, and gave it as we said.

Reader, bear in mind, it is not what we give, but how we give, that makes the service acceptable. The poor widow's mite was declared more precious than the great man's gold, by Christ; and your single penny will be held of greater value, and perhaps do more good, than many pounds wrongly presented, if only given in the exercise of faith and love.

Vulgarity.

We would guard the young against the use of every word that is not perfectly proper. Use no profane expressions—allude to no sentence that will put to blush the most sensitive. You know not the tendency of habitually using indecent and profane language. It may never be obliterated from your hearts. When you grow up you will find at your tongue's end, some expression which you would not use for any money. It was one you learned when you was quite young. By being careful, you will save yourself a deal of trouble mortification and sorrow. Good men have been taken sick and became delirious. In these moments, they have used the most vile and indecent language imaginable. When informed of it after a restoration to health, they had no idea of the pain they had given their friends, and stated that they had learned and repeated the expressions in childhood, and though years had passed since they had spoken a bad word, the early impressions had been indelibly stamped upon the heart. Think of this ye who are tempted to use improper language, and never disgrace yourselves.

The Deluded and the Deluder.

It used to be thought that certain persons had peculiar faculties for curing diseases, while in many instances, charms were put in requisition for the same purpose. Dr. Amostrong relates a curious anecdote in connection with the latter superstition. It seems Chief Justice Holt, an English jurist, when a young man went to a tavern in a country town with some friends to have a frolic, and that they did not recollect the fact of their having no money until they had run up a long score. In this dilemma, Holt was called upon to get them out of the scrape, and observing that the landlord's daughter was suffering from an ague fit, he at once collected several plants, mixing them with a great deal of mock ceremony, rolled them up into a ball and tied them round the girl's neck; scrawling first, however, grotesque letters upon the piece of parcement in which the plants were wrapped. Much to the surprise of the conjurer and his friends, the ague departed and the girl seemed quite well. The landlord was so grateful for the cure that he gladly made Holt a present of the bill himself and friends had run up, and even offered to pay something handsome. Now, the strangest part of the story is yet to be told. Some years after, when Holt was promoted to the bench, a woman was brought before him for witchcraft, (the last ever tried for that offence in England) and, strange as it may seem, she made no defence, but simply stated that she had effected certain cures by means of a ball, which she produced. This very ball proved to be the identical one which the judge had made in his youtful days.

The Seven Children.

Early in the morning, as the day began to dawn, the devout father of a devout family arose with his wife from their couch, and thanked God for the new day, and for their refreshing slumber.

But the red glow of mooning beamed into the little chamber where their seven children lay in their beds and slept.

They then gazed at the children one by one, and the mother said, 'They are seven in number; alas! it will be hard for us to find them food.' Thus sighed the mother, for there was a famine in the land.

But the father smiled and said, 'See, do they not lie and sleep, all the seven? And they have red cheeks, and the beams of the morning stream over them, so that they appear lovelier than ever, like seven blooming roses. Mother, that shows us that He who creates the morning, and sends us slep, in true and unchangeable.'

And as they stepped from the chamber, they say at the door, fourteen shoes in a row, growing smaller, two by two, a pair for each child. The mother looked at them, and when she saw they were so many, she wept.

But the father said, 'Mother, why dost thou weep? Have not all the seven received should we be anxious about that which covers them? If the children have confidence in Him who can do more than we can comprehend!

'See! His sun rises! Come, then, like it let us begin our day's work with a cheerful countenance.'

Thus they spoke, and toiled at their labors, and God blessed the work of their hands, and they had enough and to spare, they and their seven children; for faith gives strength and courage, and love elevates the son'.—[Home Magazine.

Pride in Dress—A Fable.

A little boy and girl were once seated on a flowery bank, and talking proudly about their dress.

'See,' said the boy, 'what a beautiful new hat I have got; what a fine blue jacket and trousers; and what a nice pair of shoes it is not every one who is dressed so finely as I am!'

'Indeed, sir,' said the little girl, 'I think I am dressed finer than you, for I have on a silk hat and pelisse, and a fine feather in my hat; I know that my dress cost a great deal of money.'

'Not so much as mine,' said the boy, 'I know.'

'Hold your peace,' said a caterpillar, crawling near the hedge; 'you have neither of you any reason to be so proud of your clothes, for they are only second hand, and have all been worn by some creature or other, of which you think but meanly, before they were put upon you. Why, that silk hat first wrapped up such a worm as I am.'

'There, miss, what do you say to that?' said the boy.

'And the feather,' exclaimed a bird, perched upon a tree, 'was stolen from, or cast off by, one of my race.'

'What do you say to that, miss?' repeated the boy. 'Well, my clothes were neither worn by birds or worms.'

'True,' said the sheep, grazing close by, 'but they worn on the back of some of my family before they were yours; and, as for your hat, I know that the beavers have supplied the fur for that article; and my friends, the calves and oxen, in that field, were killed not merely to get their skins to make your shoes.'

See the folly of being proud of our clothes, since we are indebted to the meanest creatures for them! and even then we could not use them if God did not give us the wisdom to contrive the best way of making them fit to wear, and the means of procuring them for our comfort; Coblin.

Insults.

Whether an act becomes an insult, depends almost as much on location and surrounding circumstances, as our faith and prjudices do. Ask a Hindoo to partake of your meat, and he would spit in your face; neglect to ask an Englishman to do so, and he would probably request the favor of meeting you in the Park. To offer wine to a Turk would be to make an enemy of 'enlarged breeches' forever. The same act to a Frenchman would probably secure you an unending friendship. Among our Oriental friends, for a man to introduce himself, into the presence of a married woman would be to the husband an unpardonable injury; a bare request to see her an affront. The person who would call upon an American, however, without inquiring for the partner of his bosom would be considered as having lost his title to a gentleman. On the coast of Malabar, if a Hallachore chance to touch a man of superior tribe, the outrage is so great that the laws allow the injured party to punish the insult with death; in almost any other country, it would be treated as an act too frivolous to notice. In France, duelling is looked upon as an accomplishment; in Japan it's murder. Suicide, on the contrary, is thought by the Frenchman an act of baseness—while the Japanese, people esteem it the most satisfactory proof of your possessing bravery. To wipe out a disgrace, the Frenchman shoots you; the Japanese, on the contrary, snoots himself; while your refusal to follow his example, would be considered such an act of poltroonery, that your family would consider themselves disgraced to all eternity.—Dutchman.

Incident of Washington,

At the commencement of the revolutionary war, there lived at east Windsor, Connecticut, according to the 'Hartford Courant,' a farmer by the name of Jacob Munsel aged 45 years. After the communication by water between this part of the country and Boston was interrupted by the British fleet, Munsel was often employed to transport provisisons by land to our army lying in the neighborhood of Boston. In the summer of 1775, while thus employed, he arrived within a few miles of the camp at Cambridge, with a large load drawn by a stout team In a part of the road which was somewhat rough, he met two carriages, in each of which was an american Geenral. The officer in the forward carrirge, when near Munsel, put his head out of the window and called to him in an authoritative tone—

'D——n it, get out of my path!'

Monsel immediately retorted—

'D——n you, I won't get out of the path; get out yourself!'

After some vain attempts to prevail on Munsel to turn out, the officer's carriage turned out, and Munsel kept the path. The other carriage immediately came up, having been in hearing distance of what passed, and the officer within put his head out of the vehicle and said to Munsel—

'My friend, the road is bad and it is very difficult for me to turn out—will you be so good as to turn out and let me pass?'

'With all my heart,' said Munsel'. 'but I won't be d——d out of the path, by any man.'

The last officer was General Washington.

A Bad Mistake.

An ignorant fellow, who was about to be married, resolved to make himself perfect in the responses of the marriage service, by mistake, he committed the office of baptism for those of riper years, so when the clergyman asked him in the church;

'Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?'

The bridegroom answered in a very solemn tone, 'I renounce them all.'

The astonished minister said, 'I think you are a fool.' To which he replied;

'All this I steadfastly believe.'

That Big Fiddle.

The following incident really took place not long since in one of the principal music stores in Camp street. A bushy headed youth—an acquaintance of ours—a great wag in the bargain, and second guardian of the store aforesaid—was lazily engaged in humming an air from Strakosch's new opera, and dusting a 'piccolo,' when a bold rough voice, within a foot of his ear, alarmed his sensibilities with the question.

'Stranger, d'you sell fiddles?'

'Fiddles?' sale 'piccolo.'

'Ya-as, fiddles.'

'Stinged instruments?' querried the youth, gravely.

'Ya-as, stringed,' said the owner of the voice, somewhat puzzled.

'Such instruments as ancient Uncle Edward requested should be suspended on the walls.

'No, I don't want them; I axed fur a fiddle!'

'What kind of a fidd'le will you have, sir: Stradevarins, an Amati, or a violin?' inquired bushy-head, looking business-like.

'I don't want none of them fixins, stranger, I jist ax you fur a real, rake-down fiddle—regular Virginny!'

'Oh! I understand; you want a fiddle!'

'Ya-as! thar you had me! You see, stranger,' said the Hoosier—for he was one of that much-abused race—'you see, stranger, my old woman tuk on mighty strong agin my comin down to Nee-n Orleans—I come down on Uncle Abrum's flat-boat, I did—and, d'you see, I want to gin her some good music when I arriv back. My old woman likes music, stranger, and so do I. I'm a regular breakdown on the Arkansaw travellor—I tell yeou I am.'

And the tall hoosier, dawling over the counter, laughing confidently to bushy-head. The latter looked sympathizingly on the pattern husband, and proceeded to show him a variety of 'stringed instruments.'

Hooser tried them all with 'Arkansas travellor,' and said 'them would do.' He fixed on one that pleased him more than the rest put his hand in his pocket, half drew out an old greasy buckskin wallet, and asked the price of that ere one.'

'One hundred dollars!' coolly replied the sales-youth.

'Wha-at!'

'One hundred dollars.'

The wallet disappeared, and the Hoosier oked as it some one were choking him.

'Here is one cheaper—only eighty dollars.'

The Hoosier continued being chocked.

'Ah, this one, sir, is a splendid fellow—just listen to the tone—I'll let you have it, being as it's you, for only two hundred dollars!'

The Hoosier's eyes rolled widly as he heard the price. His hands disappeared entirely in the immense pockets of his yellow-dyed trowser loons. There was a look of blank despair on his countenance, as he exclaimed.

'Old woman, good-bye to your fiddle!'

'Why sir, what price did you think I was going to ask for this instrument?'

'Jist about what our John gin for his stranger only a five.'

'Is that the kind you want?' said bushy-head, looking surprised; 'why dihn't you say so before. We have plenty of them. Come this way and I'll show you one.'

The wag gravely proceeded to unease an immense double bass. It stood about a foot higher than he did. The Hoosier was astonisked! He fell back a foot or two, and gazed in silence on the formidable instrument.

The seller busily proceeded to tune it, and offered it to the Hoosier, requesting him to strike up the 'Farewell.'

The Hoosier was a study for a painter as he reared back and rolled out.

'Whar's the man that plays that big fiddle? whar is he? I want to see him!'

'He plays to-night at Wynen's concert in the Lyceum Hall.'

'He does, Give me a ticket, stranger: I want to see that man.'

We departed as the Hoosier was paying for his ticket, and loudly calculating the heigth of the man that played 'that big fiddle.'

The Art of Grouping.

As Uncle Toby walked up Belknap street the other day, he saw a sign on a small wooden building, of 'Boots and Shoes made and repaired here.' On another door of the same building was another sign, emblazoned in glaring capitals, 'Corn Doctor.' The association of ideas here suggested, was so significant of narrow toes and high heels on boots, produced a crop of corns—and then off the doctor reaping a golden harvest off these horny excrescences,—that the old gentleman halted and leaned on his staff to reflect.

He remembered to have seen a sign many years ago, in a country town, reading, 'Thomsonian Infirmary,'—in letters so large that the sign was as long as the house. The proprietor was a business man, and of course he advertised in the village newspaper, that 'For the convenience of his patients he had taken that large and convenient House on Prospect street adjoining the Burying Ground.' Many people were silly enough to laugh at this announcement, but Uncle Tobby looked serious, and merely said 'it was very appropriate.'

He would have all the shops and houses arranged in groups and series. The gaming and tippling shops should have the prison and the alms-house right before them; and behind idleness there should be the shadow of poverty.

The maxim to 'Mind Consequences,' is worthy of note—and he who expects to escape them will surely be disappointed. Somebody says, very aptly, that he never knew an idle, careless man who didn't complain of bad luck or misfortune.

There are not only groups of signs, but groups of events and circumstances. He who enters through the gate of folly on the road of sin, must remember that it leads to sorrow and woe. If we choose the means we must abide the end.—Carpet Bag.

The Unclad Horseman.

Widowers should look out for breakers. Absalom Nippers was a widower, and one of the particularst men, perhaps that ever lived, though some people said that when his wife was alive he used to dress as a common field-hand, and didn't at used to take any pains with himself at all. Everybody knows how he spruced up six weeks after Mrs. Nippers died, and how he went to church regular every Sunday; but they didn't have no confidence in his religion, and used to say he only went to church to show his new suit of mourning, and ogle the gals.

With such character among the wimmen, it ain't to be supposed that he stood any chance of getting another Mrs. Nippers near home; and whether he was as bad to his first wife as they said he was or not, one thing was certain he had to look abroad for some one to fill her place.

Mr. Nippers was very lucky in finding a gal just to his mind, what lived about ten miles from his plantation. Nancy Parker was rich and though she wasn't very young nor very handsome, she belonged to Mr Nippers' church filled his eye exactly; so he sot in courtin' her with all his might. Ten miles was a good long ride, and she was an economical man, he used to ride over to old Mrs. Parker's plantation every Sunday morning to go to church with the family, take dinner with them, and ride back in the cool of the evening. In that way he managed to kill two birds with one stone; to advance the prospect of his happiness on this earth and the world to come at the same time, without loosing any of his week-day time.

A ride over a dirty road is apt to spoil a gentleman's dry goods, and made him and his horse very tired. However, Mr. Nipper's didn't mind the fatigue as much as his horse; but in a matter such as he had in hand, it was very important that he should make as good an impression as possibly, so he adopted a plan by which he was able to present himself before the object of his affections in order, with his Sunday coat as clean, and his blooming ruffles as fresh and neat as if they had just come out of the band box. This was a happy expedient, and nobody but a widower lover would think of it. He used to start from home with his new coat and shirt tied up in a pocket handkerchief, and after riding within a quarter of a mile of Mrs Parker's plantation he would turn off into a thicket of chinkapan bushes and there make his rural toilet. One brigh Sunday morning, Mr Nippers had arrived at the dressin ground. It was an important occasion. Everything was promisin' and he had made up his mind to pop the question that very day.—There was no doubt in his mind that he would return home an engaged man; and he was reconsin' over to himself Miss Nancy's plantation and niggers, while he was sitting on the horse making his accustomed change of dress. He dropped the reins on his horse's neck, what was browsin' about making up his last night's scanty feed from the bushes in his reach, and kickin' and stampin, at such flies as we e feedin' on him in return.

'I'll fix the business this time,' ses Mr Nippers to himself. 'I'll bring things to a pint this time,' ses he, and he untied his handkerchief with his clean clothes, and he spread them out on the saddle-bow.

'Wo, Ball,' says he; 'I've just got to say the word, and—wo!' ses he to his horse, what was a kickin' and rearin about. 'Wo! you old fool!—and the business is settled just like the fallin' off a log.'

He was drawin' his shirt over his head, when Ball gave a sudden spring what like to make him lose his balance. 'Wo,' ses he, but before he could get his arms out of his sleeves, Ball was whistlin' and kickin' like wrath at something that seemed to trouble him behind.—Down went the clean clothes, shirt and all the ground. 'Wo! Blast yer picter—wo, now!' says Mr Nippers, grabbin' at the rains. But before he could get hold, 'em, Ball was off like a streak of lightnin,' with a whole swarm of yellow jacket round his tail.

Mr Nippers grapped hold of the mane and tired to stop his horse, but it was no use.—Away went the infuriated Ball, and takin the road he was used to travilin', another moment brought him to the house. The gate was open, and in dashed the horse with the almost naked Nippers hangin' to his neck hollerin', 'Stop him, hornets!' as loud as he could scream.

On came the dogs, and after the horse they went round the house, scatterin' the ducks and chickens, and terrifyin' the little niggers out of their senses. The noise brung the wimmen to the door.

'Don't look, Miss Nancy! hornets! Wo, ketch him!' shouted the unclad Nippers, as with spent breath, he went dashin' out of the gate again, with the dogs still after him, and his horse's tail switchin' in every direction like a young hurricane. Miss Nancy got one glimpse of her forlorn love, and before she got her apron to her eyes, she fainted at the awful sight, (while his fast receding voice, crying, 'hornets! stop him!' still rang in her ears.—*N. Strength of the Spider.

The intelligence and power evinced by the spider, in securing its prey, has often attracted attention: but we have seldom heard of so remarkable display of these faculties as we witnessed a short time since. A small sized spider had made his webb on the under side of a table. Early one morning a cockroach was noticed on the floor directly under the web, and on approaching to take it away, it was found that the spider had thrown a line around one of its legs, and while the observer was looking at it the spider came down and lassoed the opposite leg of the cockroach. The spider then went to its web, but instantly came down and fastened a line to another leg, and continued for several minutes darting down and fastening lines to different parts of the victim. The struggles of the cockroach,—though a full grown one, were unavailing to effect his escape—he could not break his bonds, and his efforts seemed only to entangle him more. As his struggles became more and more feeble, the spider threw his lines more thickly around him; and when he had become nearly exhausted, the spider proceeded to raise him from the floor. This he did by raising one end at a time

He at first raised the head and forward part of the body, nearly half an inch; then raised the other end; and so continued to work till the cockroach was elevated five or six inches from the floor. Thus hung in chains the victim was left to die. The spider was, as before remarked, a small one, and could not have been more than a tenth of the weight of its prey.—Noah's Messenger.

Good Joke of a Widower.

A correspondent at Holly Springs, Miss., tells the following and vouches for its truth. It is the best Joke we have heard of lately:—

It appears that a widower of that town, of somewhat gallant disposition, had been accustomed to visit the widow M——, whether to see the widow herself or her lively daughters, our informant did not know. One evening he found the family party hard at work upon some garments of cloth. The girls were sewing and the widow was pressing the seams. The widower 'hung up his hat,' as usual, and took his seat by the fire. Just at that moment it happened that the widow was done with her pressing iron (vulgo, or tailor's goose), she sat it down on the hearth, and called to her negro man in a loud voice—'Jake! Jake! come and take out this goose!'

The widower started up in astonishment, not knowing what to make of this abrupt order.

'Jake, do you hear?' again exclaimed the widow.

'I beg your pardon, Mrs. M.,' said the widower with visible agitation, 'but pray dont call Jake—if you wish me to leave your house, I will go at once without the interference of servants.'

The ladies roared with laughter, and it took some moments to explain to the chagrided widower his mistake. He has not been known to visit the widow since that night.—Boston Herald.

Saving Time.

A clergyman, who had considerable of a farm as was generally the case in our forefathers' days, went out to see one of his laborers, who was ploughing in the field and he found him sitting upon the plough resting his team.

'John,' said he, 'would it not be a good plan for you to have a stub scythe here, and be hubbing a few bushes while the oxen are resting?'

John with a countenance which might well have become the clergyman himself instantly replied:

'Would it not be well sir, for you to have a swinging board in the pulpit, and when they are singing to swingle a little flax?'

The reverend gentleman turned on his heel laughed heartily, and said no more about hubbing bushes.

Fresh Air.

'Why wonder that people are sick? Go with me into yonder chamber. The windows have shutters, inside curtains, and outside curtains; the carpenter has stopped every crevice, that no outward air may be admitted. The bed has French curtains drawn over it the furnace is brought to the chamber, and the fire-board is tightly fitted, so that no ventelation is permitted But the inmates complain that they cannot sleep. They retire late, take an opiate, yet are restless! Toward spring nature rebels against such restrictions, and the frame becomes more enfeebled; a 'billious stomach,' or 'jaundice,' or 'dyspepsia,' (and perhaps all are combined,) prostrate our friends. A physician is sent for; he gives drugs, leaves orders how often 'drops' shall be taken, and when the 'blister must be dressed, and how many 'leeches' had better be applied. He speaks of his patient as of feeble constitution, who is debilitated, and needs change to recute him or her. No inquiries are made as to what produced this diseas; no intimation is given that wilful trangressions of known laws has brought it on; no reflection is made about over-heated apartments and late hours; and the patient lies in bed, believing that sickness is brought on by the hand of Providence, and we have only to submit to the all wise decree.

'How preposterous thus to reason! How wicked to throw the disease upon our Maker! No, my friend you brought it upon yourself. Do yo remember those evening parties, when you exchanged the long sleeves for bare arms, the closed neck for a bare one, the worsted hose for the delicate silk, the India rubber boot for the satin slipper? Do you remember the hoarseness and cough which followed, and your persistence in still keeping up this excitement? You gave particular orders that your chamber should be heated, it is true, on your return; but had you given orders that it should be ventilated even by night air, it would have turned to better account as far as your health was concerned. Air, air, is heaven's gift to sustain us. Why are you so terrified to inhale it? Who sleeps so soundly as the robin, and rises so early to carol his morning hymn of gratitude? Are you more feeble than the little unfledged birds? Look at the most helpless of creatures. See how they grow and thrive by obeying natural laws! This is all we need to become healthy and happy beings, viz. obedience to natural laws. Go out in the open air, walk with energetic movements, do not wrap yourself up so much as to render it uncomfortable to go far, but let the elasticity of your steps supply the scantiness of your clothing.

'How often we sigh over the fate of children in foreign countries who are so overtasked that the breath of heaven is denied them! Who ever wastes a tear over the friend who lives in luxury, and voluntarily shuts herself from the pure air? Who tells her she is daily committing suicide? No; the sallow, lily face seems actually prefered to the healthful, rosy hue of health! A lady, whose waist was about the size of a wheel pin, (such as our grandmothers used,) recently met a friend of the first 'model as it respects form, and outward signs of health. 'Why,' said the wasp-waisted lady, 'i might have mistaken her for an Irish girl, she looked so healthy!' Is there not a false idea, that a pale complexion and a small waist are considered recommending to the gentlemen?

'Oh, nonsense; No man ever wanted a sickly wife. No husband ever desired an apothecary's shop for his beuefit nor yet craved the pleasure of listening to a woman's complaints.

'How many purses (poorly filled) have been taxed with physicians' bills, apothecaries' prescriptions, and long journeys with the view of restoring decayed health!

'Up my friend raise the window give a free current in thy bed-chamber, inhale a goodly portion in the lungs, throw away the bed-curtains and the pill-boxes, and the quieting-powder; take fresh air and exercise, and you will find you have consulted with the best of physicians, for he will make you cheerful as you become vigerous; and no blessing can be compared to a healthy, cheerful companion.

QUINCY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY. This Company has just commenced business under the most favorable auspicies, the board of Directors comprise some of the most efficient and respectable men of the County and are deserving of the confidence of the public, not more for their business qualifications, than for the high esteem in which they are held by their fellow citizens, several of them have held important stations in the State. The large increase in the value of property in this vicinity, during the last ten years called for the establishment of another insurance office, and no better location could have been selected. Our citizens can now be protected from losses by fire, without resorting to foreign or distant offices, of which they can know but little, for this office with those in our neighborhood, can accomodate all who wish to be insured, we trust a liberal patronage will be bestowed upon this new candidate for public favor.

THE GRAND EXCURSION TO THE WORLD'S FAIR BY THE SONS OF NEW ENGLAND. The fast sailing clipper Ship Josephine has been chartered and will sail from the Port of Boston the 18th of June next, to convey a party of New Englanders to London the fare will be sixty-five dollars, including everything. Persons who go by this excursion can board at the Ship, as she will lay at the London dock, for four dollars per week, consequently a Man can visit London, Liverpool and Paris, and return for the trifling sum of one hundred dolllars Who wouldn't go? Letters addressed to J. B. Gibbs & Co. 7 State St. Post Paid will be punctually attended to and all desired information given.

See Advertisement of F. A. Jones & Co., Boston. Of this establishment the Boston Times says:—

"Passing towards the west part of the city, we were attracted by an unsual crowd of ladies gathered in and around Nos. 1 & 2 Tremont Row. "There is a female fugitive arrested, perhaps," said we. After making our way in with the crowd, we found that F. A. Jones & Co., determined not to be outdone, had opened in connexion with their former rooms, another large store, making altogether the most capacious retail dry goods establishment in the city, well filled with expensive and low priced fabrics of every kind for ladies wear.

The well known reputation of this house, together with their increased stock, insures to purchasers choice goods at low prices. After moralizing to ourself on the temptation to extravagance exhibited here, we passed out, not a little thankful that our better half was not present to insist upon the propriety of our selecting for her, one of those elegant shawls or a rich silk."

POETRY.

EVERY WHERE—EVERY WHERE.

Every where—every where—
Like the butterfly's silver wings,
That are seen by all in the summer air,
We meet with these beautiful things!
And the low soft lisp of the baby child,
By a thousand hills is heard,—
And the voice of the young heart's laughter wild
Like the voice of a singing bird.

The cradle rocks in the peasant's cot,
As it rocks in the noble's hall.
And the brightest gift in the noblest lot,
Is the gift that comes to all!—
For the sunny light of childhood's eyes,
Is a boon like the common air,
And like the sunshine of the skies,
It falleth every where.

They tell us this old earth no more
By angel feet is trod,—
They bring not now, as they brought of yore,
The oracles of God,
Oh! each of these young human flowers
God's own bright message bears,
And we are walking all our hours
With angels unawares.

By busy street and breezy hill,
We meet their spirit birth;
Alas! that they should linger till
They take the stain of earth!
Oh! is not theirs a blessed part,
To whom the boon is given,
To leave their errand in the heart,
And straight return to Heaven.

'TIS WELL TO HAVE A MERRY HEART.

'Tis well to have a merry heart,
However short we stay;
There's wisdom in a merry heart,
Whate'er the world may say,
Philosophy may lift its head,
And find out many a flaw,
But give me that Philosophy
That's happy with a straw.

If life but brings us happiness,
It brings us we are told,
What's hard to buy, though rich one's try
With all their heaps of gold,
Then laugh away—let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most may truly say
He's got the wealth of earth.

There's beauty in a merry laugh,
A moral beauty too—
It shows the heart's an honest heart,
That's paid each man his due.
And lent a share of what's to spare,
Despite of wisdom's fears.
And make the cheek less arrow speak,
The eye weep fewer tears.

The sun may shroud itself in clouds,
The tempest wrath begin;
It finds a spark to cheer the dark,
Is's sunlight is within,
Then laugh away, let others say
Whate'er they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth.

THE SHADY SIDE.

I sat and gazed upon thee, Rose,
Across the pebble way,
And thought the very wealth of mirth
Was thine that winter day;
For, while I saw the truant rays
Within thy window glide,
Remember'd beams reflected came
Upon the shady side.

I sat and gazed upon thee, Rose,
And thought the trancient beams
Were leaving on thy braided brow
The trace of golden dreams;
Those dreams, which like the ferry-barge
Of youth's beguiling tide,
Will leave us when we reach old age,
Upon the shady side.

Ah, yes, methought while thus I gazed
Across the noisy way,
The stream of life between us flow'd
That cheerful winter day;
And that the bark whereon I cross'd
The river's rapid tide,
Had left me in the quietness
Upon the shady side.

Then somewhat of a sorrow, Rose,
Came crowding on my heart,
Revealing how that current sweeps
The fondest ones apart,
But while you stood to bless me there,
In beauty, like a bride,
I felt my own contentedness,
Though on the shady side.

The crowd and noise divide us, Rose,
But there will come a day
When you, with light and timid feet,
Must cross the busy way,
And when you sit, as I do now,
To happy thoughts allied,
May some bright angel shed her light,
Upon the shady side.

which was exhibited in most of the principal cities of America, in the years 1840, '41, and '42, to the wonder and astonishment of thousands of naturalists and other scientific persons, whose previous doubts of the existence of such an astonishing creation were entirely removed;

Elephants and Ourang-Outangs;

ANIMALS and BIRDS of every nation; Sharks, Seals, and a variety of FISHES, including the curious

SAW AND SWORD FISH,

all in lifelike preservation; the whole forming a School of Instruction, blended with Amusement, that for extent and interest is unequalled in the known world;—the whole to be seen for the small admission fee of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

In Addition to which, and

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE,

visitors are admitted to the gorgeous Exhibition Hall, which has been newly decorated at an expense of nearly five thousand dollars, where they can witness the magnificent

MISCELLANY.

Life of a Village Editor.

There are no miseries exant more excruciating to their operations on the mind than those which pertain to the management of a country newspaper. Your metropolis establishments are full of labor saving sparatus, and are moreover conducted on the most modern and approved told-diving principle. The editor has his seperate closet or cock-loft, his assistant another, and perhaps a third and fourth their appropriate returing places also. The first employs himself two or three hours per diem upon the politics or other chief topics of the day, and there is an end of his task for 'these twenty-four hours.' His subordinates overhaul the mail papers, string items together, make up police reports, scribble scraps of local news, detail or coustruct awful accidents, regulate the marine list, &c., each in his respective department. The publisher, who is next in authority to the principal editor, oversees affairs of the counting-room, where he is also assisted by book keepers and clerks. The printer presides over the mysteries of the press and the composing stick, abbortions the work among the journemen and apprentices, and his only care is to 'get the paper out in season.' Thus by a systematic division of labor, each moving in his own allotted sphere, the whole machinery goes like clock-work.

Not so with the concerns of a village print. Whose superintends such a journal, must adapt his work to all manner of caprices, and undertake all sorts of enterprises. The duties of every part of the factory are concentrated in him. He must speculate in politics, fabricate tales, descant on the sciences, measure out paragraphs and poetry and gather ships news, compose advertisements, pick up jokes, jobs, marriages and deaths; he must hear everything know everything, tell everything; the books and bills, the purchases and payments, the collections and the kickings, are all within his province: he has the whole to regulate or provide for, to dispense or receive. He must be accessible at all hours, at his post, and often elsewhere, at every one's command, to puff or denounce, to blow up or suppress, watching the stream and winking at the eddy. His den, or business purgatory, is an epitome of chaos. In one corner is a dilapitated desk, covered with an assortment of office lumber and professional trumpery, a ledger, a dictionary, the mail book, a pile of congressional documents, bundles of unliquidated subscriptions bills, heaps of school books sent in to pay for anticipated compliments, pamphlets of every hue, size and nature—some of them sleeping like himself, or any other wearied sentinel, upon the very top of a magazine.

'Here! you Mister! do you print that paper?'

'Why—a—yes—perhaps. What then?'

'How come you for to go for to put in that lie about my aunt?'

'Pray point it out.'

'Here 'tis: (reads) 'I warn all persons against harboring my wife Dorathy, as she has behaved in a very unbecoming manner. &c.' Now what do you mean by printing such libellious stuff, eh?'

'Oh! I know nothing about your aunt Dorathy. You must settle the matter with your uncle Rahab, who signs the notice.'

'I say, Mr. Editor, why don't you blow up that nuisance, that is here in the street, forever?'

'Can I get you to advertise a lot of things I've got to sell?'

'Oh yes. Is the advertisement ready?'

'No; can't you write it for me? I'll tell you what they are. Though come to think of it, I must go and see if they are all there. You can wait I s'pose?'

'The paper is ready for press.'

'Well—I'll be back in an hour or two.'

'What the old Harry is the reason you don't send my paper?'

'It's the carrier's fault—and his name is Peter—not Harry.'

'But if he don't stop and leave it next time, I will that's all.'

'Oh don't—the error shall be corrected.'

'You did'nt report my sloop, Mister. The sloop Kettle-bottom, from Clam Harbor, Captain Rakes, with a cargo of quaw-hogs arrived last Saturday.'

'That was after the last paper was printed.'

'But you might have got it in for we laid off and on for a whole twanty-four hours.'

'Oh yes, we might, but you should have got in first.'

'Please let me look at your files—say about twelve to eighteeu mohths back. I want to find when old Mrs. Goit died, and who settled her estate.'

'By all means. There they are. Sit down.'

'But you've got better eyesight than I.—Just look them over for me. It won't take more than an hour or so. You see I never knew she was dead you know. And I expected some of her property.'

'Then you should have taken the papers.'

'Well, now and then I borrow one at the next door, to send off to cousin Malachi, and that answers my turn.'

'You must stop my paper after to-day. I have so much to do that I can spare no time to read it.'

'Discontinue my paper if you please from this date. Times are so dull. I must retrench.'

'Stop sending our paper. Father's gone to the Sou West Indies, and mother writes him all the news.'

'Don't send any more papers to Peter Grievous, up in the country.'

'But who pays his bill? He is three years in arrears.'

'Well I cant help it. You'd better write to him again, May be he'll pay if he can.'

'That name in the marriage last week was not spelt right. It should have been Mehitable, not Mehitabel. Just alter it next time.'

'Oh to be sure. If we hit a belle, we'll apologize.'

'Mister printer, my great uncle Joseph died three weeks ago, and you never noticed it.'

'How should I record the event, without being furnished with the necessary particulars?'

'But I thought you knew everything!'

'This I know—that this stingy heir would have sent the requisite information to the office had he been aware that such notices are published gratis.'

'Will there be any war?'

'I guess not.'

'Can I have some handbills struck off? I have brought on a collection of wax figures, as large as life. The Witch of Endor, King Richard with a crooked shin, Moll Pitcher, Amos Kendall, Te-come-so and Col. Johnson, old Nick Biddle, and Mr Van Buren, and all the other great men. Please to make out a flaming sheet, about two feet long, all full of print. What'll be the damage?'

'Two or three dollars probably.'

'Oh—abominable! Why I never give but four and sixpence.'

'Bister—bother wads you to give her a spoonful of pudter's ink to put od a ringworb.'

'Just call on the apprentice boy in the printing office—he'll give you some.'

'What, Jib Collids id there?'

'Yes, yes.'

'Is the comet agoing to come?'

They say it will. But you seem frightened.'

'Why, if it should hit the earth, and kill us all, and destroy all our property, what an awful thing it would be. Here I've been scratching together a little something, and got it all snug—quite a handsome estate—and then have it all sent to smash—why it's too bad.'

'But my good friend, if you go with it, and your heirs also, what's the odds? People die only once—in the world at once—in this world at least; and if it were not wisely appointed unto men once to die,' what a good-for-nothing herd would mankind soon become. Dismiss your avarice, and your fears will follow. Go right home and be quiet—take the newspaper, say your prayers, and pay the printer.

The Lambs.

It was a still, bright, summer evening. The mother sat in the little sleeping chamber, by the cradle of her lovely infant, and was singing him to sleep.

Then came the little Adelaide with sparkling eyes from the garden into the chamber.—'Oh, dear mother,' cried she, 'come out of doors there is something very beautiful to be seen!'

'Well what is it?' asked the mother. 'Oh something very beautiful!' repeated the little one, but thou must come and see!'

'That would I gladly do' answered her mother kindly, 'but see! your little brother must sleep.' Then the little maiden answered entreatingly; 'dear mother, take our little brother out with us, then he may see too, and enjoy himself with us.'

Then thought the mother in her heart;—how natural it is to the simple infant mind, to share every joy, to double and heighten it thereby! Truly, simplicity better understands the art of enjoying itself, then plotting, selfish cunning; how can I longer refuse?'

The mother rose and looked into the cradle. The little boy was sleeping quietly and soundly. Then she took the hand of the trippling maiden and said; 'now must I wonder what thou hast so beautiful!'

When they came out into the garden, the little one pointed her tiny hand towards heaven, and cried; 'now only see, mother dear, the little lambs in heaven! A whole flock!—how beautiful and how lovely.'

But it was the soft snowy clouds, in form like lambs which feed in the meadow, white and curling; and then shone in the light of the beautiful moon.

And the child's mother raised her countenance and observed the little clouds with sorrowful joy. For she thought of this second mark of childish simplicity, which draws down into its own little circle the higher splendor of heavenly existence, and clothes it with earthly beauty and form. Thus the little Adeline saw in the clouds of heaven, the lambs of earth.

'O happy, thou tender, childish innocence! 'said the mother, and pressed the little maiden to her bosom.

Yankee Fisherman and Pirate.

There lived not many years ago, on the eastern coast of Mount Deseret, an old fisherman by the name of Jedediah Spinnet, who owned a schooner of some hundred tons burden, in which he, together with four stout sons, was wont to go about once a year, to the Grand bank for the purpose of catching codfish. The old man had five things upon the peculiar merit he loved to boast his schooner 'Betsy Jenkins,' and his four sons.

The four sons were all their father represented them to be, and no one ever doubted his word when he said their like was not to be found for fifty miles around. The oldest was twenty two, while the youngest had reached his sixteenth year, and they answered to the names of Seth, Andrew, John and Samuel.

One morning, a stranger called upon Jedediah to engage him to take to Havana some iron machinery belonging to steam-engines for sugar plantations. The terms were soon agreed upon and the old man and his sons immediately set about putting the machinery on board; that accomplished they sat sail for Havana, with a fair wind wind and for several days proceeded on their course without an adventure of any kind. One morning however, a vessel was descried off the starboard quarter, which, after some hesitation, the old man pronounced to be a pirate. There was not much time allowed them for doubting, for the vessel soon saluted them for doubting, for the vessel soon saluted them with not a very areeable whizzing of a eighteen pound shot just under the stern.

'That meaus for us to heave to,' remarked the old man.

'Then I guess we'd better do it, hadn't we?' asked Seth.

'Of course.'

Accordingly the 'Betsy Jenkins' was brought up into the wind, and her main boom hauled over to the windward.

'Now boys,' said the old man, as soon as the schooner came to a stand, 'all we can do is to be as cool as possible, and trust to fortune. There is no way to escape, that I can see now but perhaps if we are seen they will take such stuff as they want and then let us go. At any rate, there is no use crying about it, for it can't be helped. Now, get your pistols and see that they are surely loaded, and have your knives ready, but be sure to hide them so that the pirates shall see no show of resistence. In a few moments, all the arms which the schooner afforded, with the exception of one or two old muskets, were secured about the persons of our down Easters, and then quietly awaited the coming of the Schooner.

'One word more, boys,' said the old man, just as the pirate came round under the stern, 'Now watch every motion I make, and be ready to jump the moment I speak.'

As Captain Spinnet ceased speaking, the pirate luffed up under the lee quarter of the fisherman, and in a moment more, the latter's deck was graced by the presence of a dozen as savage looking mortals as eyes ever looked upon.

'Are you captain of this vessel?' asked the leader of the boarders, as he approached the old man.

'Yes, sir.'

'What is your cargo?'

'Machinery for steam ingins.!

'Nothing else?' asked the pirate with a seaching look.

'At this moment, Captain Spinnet's eye caught whnt looked like a sail off to the south' ard and east'ard, but not a sign betrayed the discovery, and while a brilliant idea shot through his mind, he hesitatingly replied, 'Well, there is a little some thing else.'

'Ha, and what is it?'

'Why, sir, p'raps I hadn't to tell,' said Captain Spinnet, counterfeiting the most extrem perturbation. 'Yeu see it was given to me as a sort of trust, an twouldn't be right for me to give it up. You can take anything else you please, for I can't help myself.'

'You are an honest co'ger, at any rate; bu if you would live ten minutes longer, just tel me what you've got on board, and exactly the place where it lays,' said the pirate.

The sight of a cocked pistol brought the ol man to his senses, and in a deprecating tone he muttered:—

'Don't kill me, sir, don't I'll tell you all. We've got forty thousand silver dollars nailed up in boxes just for'are o' the cabin bulkhead, but Mr. Defoe didn't suspect that anybody would ever have thought of looking for it there.'

'Perhaps so,' chuckled the pirate, while his epes sparkled with defight. And then turning to his own vessel he ordered all but three of his men to jump on the Yankee.

In a few moments the pirate had taken of the hatches, and in their haste to get at the 'silver dollars' they forgot all else; but not so with Spinnet; he had his wits to work, and no sooner had the last of the villains disappeared below the natchway, than he turned to his boys and said.

'Now, boys, for your lives. Seth, you clap your knife across the fore throat and peak halyards. and you John cut the main' Be quick, now, an' the moment you have done it jump aboard the pirate. Andrew and Sam, you cast off the pirate's graplings, an' then you jump—theen we'll walk into them three chaps aboard the clipper. Now for it!

No sooner was the last words out of the old man's mouth than his sons did exactly as they were directed.—The fore and main halyards were cut and the two graplings cast off at the same instant, and as the heavy gaffs came rattling down, our heroes leaped on board the pirate The moment the clipper felt at liberty her head swang off, and before the astonished buccaneers could gain the deck of the fisherman, their own vessels was nearly a cable's length to the leeward, sweeping gracefully away before the wind, while the three men who had been left in charge were easily secured.

'Holloo, there,' shouted Captain Spinnet, as the luckless pirates crowded around the lee gangway of their prizes, 'when you get them ere silver dollars, just let us know will you!'

Half a dozen piztol shots was all the answer the old man got, but they did him no harm; and, crowding on sail, he made for the vessel he had discovered, which lay dead to the leeward of him and which he now made out to be a large ship. The clipper cut through the water like a dolphin, and a short space of time Spinnet luffed up under the ship's stern, and explained all that had happened. The ship proved to be an East Indiaman, bound for Charleston, having all told thirty men on board, a portion at once jumped into the clipper and offered their services in helping him to take the pirates.

Before dark Captain Spinnet was once more within hailing distance of his own vessel, and raising a trumpet to his mouth, he shouted:

'Schooner, ahoy! Will you quietly surrender yourselves prisoners if we come on board!'

'Come and try it!' returned the pirate captain, as he brandished his cutlass above his head in a very threatening manner, which seemed to indicate that he would fight to the last.

But that was his last moment; for Seth crouched below the bulwark, taking deliberate aim along the barrel of a heavy rifle, and as the bloody villain was in the act of turning to his men, the sharp crack of Seth Spinnet's weapon rang its death peal, and the next moment the pirate captain fell back into the arms of his men with a brace of bullets through his heart.

'Now,' said the old man, as he levelled the long pivot gun, and seized a lighted match, 'I'll give you just five minutes to make up your minds in, and if you don't surender, I'll blow every one of you into the other world.'

The death of their captain, and, withal, the sight of the pointed pivot gun—the peculiar properties of which they knew full—brought the pirates to their senses and they threw down their weapons and agreed to give themselves up.

In two days from that time, Capt Spinet delivered his cargo safely at Mavana, gave the pirate into the hands of the civil authorities, and delivered the clipper up to the government, in return for which he received a sum of money sufficient for independance for the remainder of his life, as well as a very handsome medal from the Governor.

Newspaper Collecting.

WRITTEN FOR A SOUTH CAROLINA PAPER, BUT SUITED TO OTHER MERIDIANS.

My Dear Sir—I have just returned from a tour through this State, and proceed to furnish you with an account of my labors and their success. I have been gone for three months and assure you, in all sincerity that I am fully satisfied. You furnished me with a list of one hundred and seventeen owing subscribers as you will recollect. I have called upon one hundred and four of them, and have the honor of paying over to your order three dollars and twelve and one half cents, being the amonnt to which you are entitled. I return you the list, number one to 117, and now give you the reply of each.

No. 1—Is a minister. He says in the first place he never got one half of the numbers (which is a lie accoring to the account of the postmaster,) and in the next place, your joker's column was to scurrilous. He can't think of aiding to sustain a paper that advertises horse races and gander pulling. He wonders at your impudence in sending him his bill after publishing the account of the great prize fight between left-handed Smoke and Battering Ball. He wants nothing to do with you—never wants to hear from you again.

'No. 2—Is in jail for debt. He has not seen a half dollar for year. Says he would pay with the utmost cheerfulness, if he could had to borrow a shirt to put on last Sunday. Admires your paper wonderfully, and hopes you will continue sending it to him. He wishes you to take a bold stand in favor of the abolition of imprisonment for debt, as he thinks it would be a very popular move with gentlemen in his situation. If you send him any more papers he hopes you will see that the postage is paid, as otherwise he will be unable to enjoy your luonbrations. He sends his best respects.'

No. 3 Is a young Doctor. Says your paper is beneath the notice of a gentleman. Wouldn't give a——for a cart load. Says you inserted an article reflecting on the profession. Only wishes he could catch you here—would make you smell——, Is going to persuade every body that took your paper to stop it. Cuss'd your bill, and says you may collect it the best way you can.

No. 4—Is an old maid. Says you are always taking a fling at single ladies of an uncertain age. Would'nt pay you if she was rolling in wealth, and you had't cash enough to buy a crust of bread. Sent all the papers she had back month ago, and says now that she has sent them back she don't owe you anything. Says she's even with you, and intends to keep so till the day of judgment.—Asked me not to forget to tell you that you are no gentleman, or you would't undertake to slander a large and respectable class of the female population of our country.

No. 5—is a gambler—a sporting gentleman. Says he got completely cleaned out last week at the races. Could't accommodate his grandmother with half a dime if she was starving. Likes your paper tolerably—would like it better if you published more races, and would occasionaly give an account of a cock-fight. Liked the description of the prise fight amazingly—it redeemed a multitude of your faults. Hopes you won't think hard of him for not paying you now—put had got a prospect of soon having some loose change, as he after a rich young greehorn who arrived here last week. Will pay your bill out of the pluckings.

No. 6—Is an old drunkard. Hasn't got anything and never expects to have. Gathered up all the papers that he had and sold them for a half pint of rum, to the doggery-keeper to wrap groceries in. Wished you would send a pile, as they cost him no postage, his brother-in law being postmirster, and permitting him to take out his papers for nothing. Winked at me when I presented your bill, and inquired if I wasn't distant relation of the man that butted the bull off the bridge.

No 7—Is a magistrate. Swore that he never owed you a cent, and told me I was a low rascal for trying to swindle him in such a barefaced manner. Advised me to make tracks in a little less than no time, or he would get out a warrant against me as a common cheat, and have me sent to prison. Took his advice, Is by all ods the meanest man I have seen yet.—Never go near him again, I swear!

No 8—Is a politician. Says although you profess to publish a neutral paper, it is not so. Thinks he has seen a considerable squinting towards the side which he opposed. Meant to have told you a year ago to stop his paper, but forgot it. Tells you to do so now, and thinks you are getting off very cheaply in not losing any more by him. Believes you to be a rascal and is too honorable to have anything to do with you, as it might compromise him and injure his prospects.

No. 9—Paid up like a man. The only one. Likes your paper firstrate, and means to take and pay for it as long as you publish or he lives. Asked me to dinner and treated me like a king. An oasis in the desert! A man fit for heaven!

No. 10—Is a merchant. Expects to break shortly, so must save all his small change.—Offered me a pair of breeches and cotton handchief for the debt. Refused him with scorn. Told me to go to the devil. Long jaw. Threatened to break my head. Dared him to do it. Threw a hatchet at me. I doged it and put out.

Nol 11 to 117—mean as rot. Had no money—wouldn't pay—didn't owe. I swore I'd sue. Said I might sue and be hanged.—Cursed all the little ones and hurried from the big. Never got the first red cent from one of them.

The foregoing is a true extract from my note-book. I have not succeded a whit better with the patrons of other publications for which I am agent, as it is impossible to collect from those who are determined not to pay. I have said I have been away three months. I have expended in that period two hundred and ten dollars and forty-five cents. I am very willing to do my share towards the propigation of news, but more than that no reasonable man could ask. This business don't exactly suit me—I can't stand it.

Please accept my resignation and strike my name from your list of agents. I admire your paper very much myself, but it would be a queer looking sort of a concern that would come fully up to the requirements of everybody. One wants independence in an editor—another don't want any. One wants all slang—another wouldn't touch a journal that contained an irreverent line with a ten foot pole. One sentimental; lacksidaisical Miss in pantalets wanted nothing but love—another never read anything but the marriages.

All kinds of abuse I have to bear, too. I would'nt mind it so much if they only cursed you and your paper, but they curse me too!—Swindler, rascal, villian, blood sucker. These are some of the names they think proper to bestow upon me. I tried fighting for a while and thrashed several of your patrons like blazes, but occasionally I got liked like thunder myself. Once I was put in jail for assault and battery, and only escaped by breaking out.

Send me a receipt for three dollars twelve-and-a half cents, and I believe me yours in despair.

AARON SWEATWELL.

"JENNY LIND BOAT."—This beautiful boat, owned by G. F. Spear, is in trim, and ready at short notice for fishing or sailing excursions.—The Jenny Lind is one of the fastest crafts we know of, her skipper is a gentleman in every respect, and in the management and sailing of a boat hard to be beat. See his advertisement.

REPORT OF MR. MORGAN'S DOINGS IN QUINCY.—He has been the instrument of doing much good. He has a peculiar tact of emulating our School Children to a laudible enterprise of procuring names to the Temperance Pledge.

He has lectured six times in town, once in the poor-house and five times in the Town Hall; and by the means of the children, has obtained more than fifteen hundred names to the temperance pledge. The children of this place seemed ready disciplined for such a work, as most of them had served in the Cold Water Army in town, so that in the present campaign the Light Infantry did execution like old veterans; especially those residing at the Point; as more than four hundred signatures to the pledge were obtained by them. All present in the Grammar School of that place except two signed it. Thomas B. Jones of the same school presented on his pledge one hundred and thirty-five signatures. Others too have done nobly and we are gladly record their names. George T. Newcomb, Cordelia A. E. Lapham, Elizabeth L. Baxter, Lucsia F. Wright, Abby M. Nightingale, Josephine Newcomb, Frederick H. French, Mary W. Guild and Susan Nightingale are among the worthy ones. Anna Rideout has more signatures to her pledge than any in town except one, but she declared that she did it not for notoriety or for money; and Anna M. Mulford for the same reason refused the reward, and had desire that her name should not be known; except to those who have signed her pledge and have writ on their names for temperance side by side with hers; by them may she ever be remembered, and may their names like her own be an honor to the cause of humanity.—From the West District Lucy Davis, Abby M. Fitzerald and Sarah E. Chesley deserve a place among the persevereing ones, as they together presented on their pledges one hundred and seventy-five names; some of which were obtained from soil perhaps not so congenial to total abstinence, or prolific of temperance sentiment as the youthful laborers had at the Point. Thus we see our home missionaries are to be young ladies, as they are the first to enter the field of benevolence, and the most preserving to the end. Now and then we find a son of ambition who like a miser work early and late for the Loner, or for the reward, but it is in the female and almost in her alone, we find the natural streams of sympathy and charity, to bless the neglected forsaken afflicted and forgotten of mankind. Mr. Morgan's tenders his thanks to the people of Quincy for the kind reception he met with especially among the friends of temperance; and the energies of these young philanthopists would have remained forever dormant had they not been encouraged at home; so to the parents he ascribes all the honor.

The following testimonial, which we take the liberty to publish, is only in accordance with opinions we often hear expressed; and we will only preface it with this simple remark: whosoever wishes for a first rate City weekly, should at once subscribe for the American Union.

Published by R. B Fitts & Co, 37 Court Square Boston, Mass. at two Dollars a year.

"The undersigned, having received and perused the 'American Union' newspaper, published by R. B. Fitts & Co., for several months past, take pleasure in expressing the opinion that is a well conducted and valuable Family weekly paper, and such, we recommend it to the favor of our friends, and the community of New England, generally. The enterprise and talent exhibited in its editorial management, meet our cordial approval; and as a general Miscellaneous, News and Literary paper, we deem it worthy of an extended and generous support.

FIRE IN DOVER, N H.—About 9 o'clock on Monday evening, the barn of John Guppy, of Dover situated on the Turnpike, was burnt to the ground. Four oxen, two horses, three cows and calves, and and twenty-five tons of hay were consumed. Loss about 1500; partinlly insured.

DESTRUCTION OF THE WHEAT.—The wheat in centre and Southern portion of the State is most seriously injured by the late frosts; especially the early sown. Thousands of acres may be seen, red at top, yellow at bottom, and wholly suspended in its growth. It has commenced sprouting from the root, and will throw up new heads probably, if the weather should be favorable, and make perhaps a half crop, but not of perfect grain.—Late grown wheat promises well. POETRY.

HYMN.

Written and sung at a social party of the friends of Rev. Dr. Storr's at Braintree, on his birth day anniversary, by Mrs. N. B. T. A. a member of his society.

Once more around a pastor's board,
We come a cheerful, happy throng,
Of willing feet —with one accord,
With grateful hearts and cheerful song.

We thank the Giver of all good,
On this, our pastor's natal day;
That on this watch-tower long he's stood,
To point to Heaven, and Christ the Way.

Long may he here dispense thy Word,
In truth and beauty, and with might;
His life, with his dear lov'd ones, Lord,
Make it most precious in thy sight,

Since last we met, we bless Thy hand,
Tho' sickness pressed with ruthless power—
Each member of his household band,
Now lives to enjoy this present hour.

We praise thee God; each rolling year
Hath brought new mercies from thy hand;
Our life, our health, and friends so dear—
And peace and plenty thro' the land.

We will not mourn an absent one;
Nor grieve for those that early die;
We trust the arms of thy dear Son,
Sweetly encircles them on high.

Grant us thy grace, to live in love,
Like Him, who was our Pattern given;
Then pastor, flock, with saints above,
Shall join in sweet commune in Heaven.

BRAINTREE, FEB. 1851

TIME TO ME THIS TRUTH HAS TAUGHT.

Time to me this truth has taught,
('Tis a truth that's worth revealing.)
More offend from want of thought
Than from want of feeling—
If advice we would convey,
There's a time we should convey it,
If we've but a word to say,
There's a time in which to say it.

Oft unknowingly the tongue
Touches on a cord so aching,
That a word or accent wrong
Pains the heart almost to breaking.
Many a tear of wounded pride,
Many a fault of human blindness,
Has been soothed or turned aside
By a quiet voice of kindness.

Many a beauteous flower decays
Though we tend it ever so much—
Something secret on it preys,
Which no human aid can touch;
So in many a lovely breast
Lies some canker grief concealed
That if touched is more oppressed—
Left unto itself, is healed,
Time to me this truth has taught,
('Tis a truth that's worth revealing)
More offend from want o' thought
Than from want of feeling.

THE DAISY.

The daisy blossoms on the rocks,
Amid the purple heath;
It blossoms on the river's banks,
That threads the glens beneath.
The eagle, at his pride of place,
Beholds it by his nest:
And in the mead it cushions soft
The lark's descending breast.

Before the cuckoo, earliest spring
Its silver circlet knows,
When greening buds begin to swell,
And zephyr melts the snows:
And when December howl
Along the moorlands bare,
And eniy blooms the Christmas rose,
The daisy still is there.

Samaritan of flowers to it
All races are alike;
The Switzer on his glecier height—
The Dutchman by hit dyke—
The seal-skin vested Esquimaux,
Begirt with icy seas—
And underneath his burning noon.
The parasoled Chinese.

The emigrant on distant shore,
Mid scenes and faces strange,
Beholds its flowering on the sward,
Where'er his footsteps range;
And when his yearning home-sick heart,
Would bow to its despair,
It reads his eye a lesson sage—
That God is everywhere!

NECDOTES.

Those who are incapable of shinning but by dress would do well to consider that the contrast between them and their clothes turn out much to their disadvantage.

The young man that supplies West Troy with measles is now making his spring tour. Families can be supplied by leaving their names at the post office.

A celebrated colored preacher in speaking of the 'division of the sheep and goats—said, 'Bredren, you can see which side the cullured pussons will be on, for dey hab the wool.'

A lady hired a Western country girl for a family 'help,' and was surprised to see her poke her head into the parlor one afternoon when visitors were present, and ask, 'Marm, did you call just now? I thought I hearn a yell.'

Select School.

A School for advanced Scholars will be opened in the Lyceum Hall in Braintree, on Monday, April the 7th to continue eighteen weeks, under the charge of Mr. S. D. Hayden

BOSTON MUSEUM,

Tremont Street,..... Boston.

ALWAYS OPEN DAY AND EVENING.

THIS MUSEUM is the largest, most valuable, and best arranged in the United States. It comprises no less than

SEVEN DIFFERENT MUSEUMS,

to which has been added the present year, besides the constant daily accumulation of articles, One Half of the celebrated

PEALE'S PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM,

swelling the already immense collection to upwards of

HALF A MILLION ARTICLES,

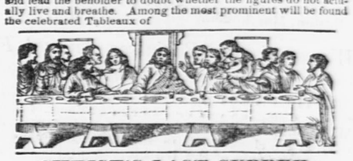
the greatest amount of objects of interest to be found together at any one place in America; and an entirely

NEW HALL OF WAX STATUARY,

ONE HUNDRED FEET in length, filled to its utmost capacity with WAX FIGURES of the size of life, singly and in groups, to the number of upwards of TWO HUNDRED, which have been in preparation for the last two years by a corps of the most distinguished artists to be found in either the old country or the new, and are so NATURAL and LIFELIKE as to

Mock Reality,

and lead the beholder to doubt whether the figures do not actually live and breathe. Among the most prominent will be found the celebrated Tableaux of



CHRIST'S LAST SUPPER

with his Twelve Disciples; representing the consternation and dismay of the chosen ones at the moment when he told them that ONE OF THEM SHOULD BETRAY HIM.

THE PRODIGAL SON,

returned home clothed in rags, and received by his forgiving father. The imposing spectacle of

THE CRUCIFIXION,

composed of more than forty figures; a correct representation of that event, according to the best received authorities.

Christ Disputing with the Doctors;

a characteristic group of seven figures.

THE GAME OF LIFE,

in which is shown the Christian and Satan contending for the mastery.

THE SIAMESE TWINS,

and their beautiful American wives.
Representation by nine figures, of the

of the passengers of a merchantman in the India Seas. After a description by one of the survivors.

HORRORS of SLAVERY,

as exemplified by seven figures, being actual likenesses of a slave-owner, a slave-driver, and their victims.

MURDER OF MISS McCREA,

by the Indians during the Revolutionary war; a thrilling group, showing the characteristics of the Red Men.

INTEMPERANCE,

and its certain evils; illustrated in three groups, the last a correct picture of a

Wife Murdered by her Husband.

Also, groups of a School,—a Milliner's Shop,—a Shoemaker's Shop,—a Barber's Shop,—a Blacksmith's Shop, &c., as well as a variety of single figures of distinguished men, &c., with upwards of

One Hundred of Cabinet Size,

rendering it the largest collection of Wax Figures in America. The entire of the above, and the immense collection of

BIRDS, BEASTS, FISH, INSECTS & REPTILES,

obtained from all parts of the world, together with innumerable varieties of Natural and Artificial Curiosities;

Paintings, Engravings and Statuary,

OIL PORTRAITS

of the GREAT and GOOD of all nations,—Naval and Military Heroes, Patriots, Statesmen, and Divines;—Rare Coins and Medals;—Shells, Corals, and Fossils;

EGYPTIAN MUMMIES,

and ancient Sarcophagi, 3000 Years old; and an entire

Family of Peruvian Mummies:

Test of Abolitionism.

All is not gold that shines, and the loudest mouthed philantropists and reformers sometimes cave in when put to a severe practical test, like the following:

'I had a bro'her-in-law,' said Mose Perkins, 'who was one of the ravenist, madde t'reddest hottest abolitionist you ever saw. I liked the pesty critter well enough and should have been very glad to see him come to spend a day, feichin' my sister to see me and my wife, if he hadn't 'lowed his to gus to run on s'bout niggers and slavery, and the equality of the races, and the duty of overthrowing the constitution of the United States, and a lot of other things, some of which made me mad, and the best part of 'em right sick. I puzzled my brains a good deal to think how I could make him shut up his noisy head 'bout abolition.

'Wall, one time when brother-in-law come over to stay, an idee struck me. I hired a nigger to help me in haying time. He was the biggest, strongest, greatest nigger you ever see. Black! he was blacker than a stack of black hats, and jest as shiny as a new beaver hat. I spoke to him. 'Jake,' sez I, 'when you hear the breakfast bell ring, don't you say a word, but you come into the parlor and sit right down among the folks and eat your breakfast' The nigger's eyes stuck out of his head about a feet 'Youre jokin' massa,' sez he. 'Jokin'!' sez I, 'I shan't have time to wash myself and change my shirt. 'So much the better,' sez I. Wall breakfast come, and so did Jake, and he sat down 'long side my brother-in-law. He started but he didn't say a word. There wasn't no mistake about it. Shut your eyes and you'd know it—for he was loud, I tell you. There was a fust rate chance to talk abolitionism, but brother-in-law never opened his chowder-head. 'Jake, sed I, you be on hand at dinner time' and he was on hand He had been working in the medder all the forenoon—it was hot as hickory and bilin' pitch, and—but I leave the rest to your imagination.

Wall—in the afternoon—brother-in-law come up to me, madder than a short tailed bull in hornet time.

'Mose, said he, I want to speak to you.'

'Sing out, sez I.'

'I haint but a few words to say, sez he, but if that 'ere confounded nigger comes to the table while I'm here, I'll clear out.'

Jake ate his supper that night in the kitchen but from that day to this, I never heard my brother-in-law open his head about abolitionism. When the fugitive slave bill was passed, I thought he'd let out some, but he didn't for he knew that Jake was still workidg on the farm.

A tall, awkward looking chap, just from the Green Mountains of Vermont, came on board one of the splendid North River boats at Albany. His curiosity was amasingly excited at once, and he commenced 'peeking,' as he called it, into every nook and corner of the boat. The captain's office, the engine room, the water closets, the barber's shop, all underwent his inspection; and then he went on deck and stared in amazement at the lever beam, the chimneys, and the various 'fixins,' till at last he caught sight of the bell. This was the crowning wonder, and he viwed it from every position, walked round it, got down on his knees and looked up into it, exclaiming, 'Wall, raly this beats the bell on our meetin' house, a darned sight.' By this time the captain and several of the passengers was attracted to the genius. 'How much would you ask to let a feller ring this bell?' 'You may ring it for a dollar, sir,' said the captain. 'Wal it's a bargain all fair and agreed, and no backing eout.' 'It's a bargain, sir,' said the captain. Our hero went deliberately and brought a seat and took hold of the bell rope, and having arranged everything to his sstisfaction, commenced ringing slowly at first and gradually faster and faster, till everyone rushed on deck screaming with alarm.—There stood the captain, and there sat the 'Vairmounter,' ringing away, first slow and then fast, and then two or three tapes at a time. The passengers then began to expostulate; the captain said it was a bargain.

But the passengers became urgent that the eternal clangor should be stopped. All the while there sat our hero undisturbed, ringing away more ways than a cockney chime ringer ever dreamed of. At last the captain began to think it time to stop the simpleton, but his answer was, 'a fair bargain, and no backing eout,' and he kept ringing away for dear life. 'Well says the Captain, 'what will you take to stop?' 'Wal, capt'n I guess I sheant lose nuthin' if I take a five dollars and a free passage to New York, but not a darned cent less.' 'Well, walk down to the office and get your money and passage ticket,' said the captain. After that we all went to sleep.'

The Battle of Life.

The saying that one-half of the world knows not how the other half lives, has grown into a vulgar adage. It is true and untrue, for one half the world do not live at all—that is they have no life worth having. The constant struggle with poverty and the temptations that surround it, the longings ever forcing themselves upon the heart for something that are invariably attendant upon every hope and wish; the heart burnings, the graspings after good that vanishes as it is approached, the bitter knowledge that the other half of the world feels for these no sympathy, and the envious jealousies that these thoughts engender cannot be called like

Life must have soul. 'How many have died in soul, and have no chance of life?' Did each carry a mirror in his breast that reflected to the rasting world the hopes and fears, the struggles of good with evil, the bitter thoughts and the mad resolves that each heart nourished, what a picture of human misery would be presented to our gaze. Walk down Broadway; how beautifully the sun shines—how all glitters; look at the jewels—those articles of taste and luxury presented at every turn to please the eyes of the passing thousands. How the silk rustles and the satins shine, and feathers nod over lovely forms, and what a smile is upon every lip. Trust it not, it covers—what? All that is horrible, despicable, mean, heartbreaking and agonizing. Not one perhaps of all this gay and seeming happy throng is happy; some secret wish remains ungratified; some dreadful crime preys upon the heart and remorse is working there—working unseen and hidden, but surely, fatally. That smile shall vanish, that laughing eye grow dim, and all unveiled, that dreadful agony alone shall stand revealed. What is life to such a one? A mockery, a very mockery! O, how often the wish, 'Would that I had never been born,' is dwelling in the heart.

Take your pampered son of luxury, who from his cradle has never known a want nor dreamed of a wish that was not gratified; go to his splendid home, sit with him at his well spread board, and feast with him upon the delicious products of every clime, brought from far and near to please his palate and renew his appetite; sit with him at his fireside, go with him to his club, join in his games and hear his laugh and see his merry look. 'Tis false; his life is all one lie; he does not know a happy hour; his pampered body is a wretched charnel house, were made for, and he uses them without one thought at all the want, the misery and wretchedness by which he is surrounded. Can that man be happy?

Now come with us again. We leave this gaudy throng and turn into this by-street. What a change! Do not let it surprise you. Its change is only external—the inner view is just the same. Come let us go down into this cellar whose rotten, tottering steps can scarce support our slipping feet. How noisome and how dark—now look around you, see the green slime upon the walls—the festering rottenness of every thing around—no light, no fire, no sound. Yes, there is a sound—listen! it is a moan! it comes from that poor pallet of straw upon which, now that our eyes are used to the darkness, we perceive a miserable form reclined. Her sunken cheeks and hollow eyes proclaim that Death has laid his hand upon her; and that her life of misery in this world is nearly over.

'I am dying, John; come near me before I cannot see you, for my sight is going fast,' she addresses this to yon figure crouched there upon the old table. It is a man, but what a man! He sits with his knees drawn up to his chin, his hands pressed against his forehead and eyes fixed with a demoniacal look upon the ground He is clothed in rags, and his unshorn beard, his haggard look, his withered form, and the horrible expression of his face, mark him a picture of dispair; grim, ruthless, unutterable hopeless despair. As the sound of her voice breaks upon his ear, he starts like one aroused from a dreadful dream, gazes at us for a moment but says nothing; then as he recollects, rushes with a single bound beside the form of her who lies there dying—dying of what Starvation! He takes her hand—that rough and desperate man—as tenderly as when he took it first, in years gone by, and printed on it the kiss that thrilled his heart and made her bosom bound with hope and joy.

'Mary! Mary!' It is too late. As he releases the hand the arm drops nerveless by her side. He places his hand upon her heart—all is over. He bursts into an agony of tears and throws himself beside her. They have fought the battle of life together—both have been worsted—both were outcasts; one is dead—the other had better be.

Let us leave this place and cross the street. The 'Toombs' is opposite, and as luck will have it we are just in time. A crowd of men and ragged boys are following those two police officers who have in charge and old man; he walks listlessly up the steps, heedless of the crowd around him, and he stands before the Justich.

'What is the charge against this man?' inquires the magistrate.

A Dutch grocer steps forward to reply. 'He stole a piece of pork from my store.'

'Who saw him?'

'I mineshelf, your honor. He vash shtanding on te corner, and ven I vesh meshuring some coal he shlipped in and took te pork: and I ketcht him mit te pork in his hand.'

'Make your affidavit.' An oath is soon made and the man is about to be sent to the jail.

'Why did you steal this pork?' inquired the magistrate as he is making out the commitment.

Listen to the prisoner.

'I did take the pork, your honor, but I was hungry. I had spent all the money I had at his store, and for two days past have had nothing to eat. I asked him to trust me this morning and he refused. I was starving—I was desperate—and I took it.

'It was a theft and you must go to jail; take him away officer.'

Shall we follow him to prison; shall we see that old gray-headed man locked in a filthy loathsome cell with the worst of felons for obeying an instinct of his nature? No, we have not time. Here is another 'case,' but how different! The culprit is well dressed—as neat and unwrinkled as though he had just emerged from the hands of a careful valet. How he swaggers in—how obsequious the officers are—how polite the magistrate. 'A private room!' 'O! ceratinly.' Mr. G—— is to respectable a man to be examined before the gaping vulgar crowd—a private examination certainly! Not so private, however but we can hear it. O, it's nothing! Mr. G—— is only a defaulter to the amount of some ninety thousand dollaas; he says it will be 'all right,' and so it will. Look at the papers in the morning and see if it is not He is of such good family; so rich; so respectable; 'such a clever fellow,' that it is impossible that he should be sent to jail. No, he allowed to depart on his 'parole of honor' to appear and answer the charge. A fuss will be made for a time, but it will soon die out and be forgotten. "But the trial?' you ask. Pshaw man! it will never come to s trial?' The rich man's writ, the heabeas corpus, will prevent any such disagreeable risk. It would be a disgrace to the whole circle of the upper ten to put such a man on his trial like a common criminal. If he were like the other, now, some poor starving wretch that nobody cares ought about, and that stole a morsel to keep him from death, and enable him to fight the 'Battle of Life' a little longer it would be a diffetent matter; but he is so respectable and 'looks so fair and smells so sweet,' that it would be a living disgrace to his 'family connections,' to send him to Sing Sing.

You are amazed. We will show you some more scenes in the Battle of Life, as fought here in New York, that will astonish you more. N. Y. Day Book.

Adventure with a Robber.

Freshness is an invaluable ingredient in literature. Old materials been so often brought before the reading community, combined, recombined and re-named, that novelty of subject seems indispensible. Hungary, however, seems to be fresh ground. It has been trodden but has not yet become a common highway, especially for pirates in literature. Francis and Thereasa Pulozky have written a work entitled, 'Tales and Traditions of Hungary;' and it has intrinsic merit. The work is illustrative of Hungarian life, and the following legend will introduce the famous robber Habuark to the reader.

Prince Frederick Schwazenburg, used often to relate his encounter with the notorious robber Habuark. The Prince once accompanied a lady from Hungary to Vienna. They journeyed on the mountain roads between the countries of Gormor and Torna. Heavy showers had greatly damaged the roads; evening approached the tired horses had reached the ridge of the wood height, but could not be urged on further; and the travellors were thus compelled to seek shelter for the night in the inn of Aggtlek, a hiding place of ill note for robbers. The carriage halted before the house and the servant inquired whether room could be afforded. The publican replied that there was room for the lady, but that the gentleman could not be accommodated, the large guest room being over-filled. After some visable reluctance, he owned that the gang of Habuark was drinking there. The lady became terrified, and entreated the prince not to remain; but it had grown dark, the rain was pouring down, the horses were worn out, and the steep decent of the road was so dangerous that it was most hazardous to proceed The prince tried to reassure the lady; so she locked herself up in the room assigned to her. Her companion, wraped in his white officer's cloak, under which he kept his pistols in readiness, stepped into the apartment where the robbers were assembled, and sat down at the table, facing the window, whilst his servant, likewise armed, kept watch outside the house, close to the window, on the alert in case his master should want any aid.

The company consisted of about ten or twelve men. Their rifles leaned against the wall; their axes lay upon the board, on which stood the wine-jugs. They drank, sang, and did not take any notice of their newly-arrived guest. The Prince mixed in their newly guest. The Prince mixed in their conversation, took wine with them, and listened unto their conversation until it had grown late.—Suddenly he rose, called the publican, threw a gold coin on the table, and said: 'This is for the wine these good folks have drunk, they are my guests. But now,' he continued, addressing the robbers, 'it is time to sleep. In the adjoining room is a sick lady—the entertainment has lasted long enough—I cannot allow anyone longer to occupy this room, or disturb the lady's rest by noise.'

At this imperative command one of the robbers jumped from his seat, and contemptuous laughing, cried out: 'Does the gentleman fancy that, because he has a carrige and four and plenty of money in his pocket, he has the right to command us?'

An uproar followed. The men vociferated, 'We are poor lads, and therefore are masters here.'

'We are no timorous peasants, who take off our hats to every gentleman.'

'We have yet money and credit enough to swallow a draught when we are thirsty.'

'We do not accept any gift from people who fancy themselves better then we are.'

'We will not be ruled.'

All this was simultaneously uttered, with a loud tumult, from all sides. All the robbers had got up. The prince mechanically caught hold of his pistols and threw off his cloak.

'I am a master of the craft in which you are but apprentices,' he exclaimed with dignity.—'You are robbers, I am a soldier, and fear neither the mouth of a rifle, nor the edge of an axe,'

During this uproar a man of middling height and strongly-marked features had risen from the bench beside the stove, where he had quietly sat during the whole conversation, without partaking of the wine. He now said in a commanding tone:

'Silence!'

The robbers grew speechless at this order, and again sat down to the table.

'Mr. Officer, continued the man, 'do you think that you frighten us. I, too, have been a soldier, and have most probably smelt more powder than you ever did. I am Habuark.—If I desired to do you any harm a single whistle would suffice. The table at which you have sat would be everthrown, the candles extinguished, and before you was aware of what was going on, you would be a dead man, no less than your servants there at the wiadow, who thinks he watches us, whilst we watch him. But I saw you help a lady out of the carriage, and take her to the adjoining room. We never will disturb a lady's rest; we war with men not with women. For the present we shall leave this shelter; yet, remember, sir, that this is the first time for a fortnight that these men have been under a roof, and that the couch there below on the damp oak leaves is by no means comfortable. Farewell!

'Friends, let us go,' he called to his men.—They took up their arms and went.

The Prince was greatly struck by the whole proceedings. He did not entirely trust the robber's words; and relieving his servant, they paced up and down, thus keeping watch the whole night. But no robber again appeared

On the morrow the lady continued the journey with her companion. The weather had cleared up, and only the puddles in the lanes and the drops of rain glistening on the branches reminded them of the clouds of the previous day. After they had ridden about an hour they suddenly heard the discharge of a rifle close to them in the woods. Haburak stepped forth from the bushes, and bid the coachman 'halt.'

The horses stopped; the Prince drew forth his pistols. But Haburak, without heeding his threatening mien, rode close up to the carriage door and said:

'We sacrificed our comfort that the rest of this lady should not be disturbed. Now I will see whether it was worth the trouble.'

With these words he lifted the veil which hung down from the lady's bonnet, and looked for an instant into her face. The lady blushed, and the robber said:

'She is neally very pretty.'

He turned round, plucked a wild rose from a bush close at hand, and offered it to the lady with these words—

'Accept this rose kindly, as a keepsake from the poor robber Habuark; and if you some time hear that he has been hanged, pray an Ave Maria for his soul.'

The lady took the rose, and the robber vanquished.

Two years later, newspapers related that the robber Habuark had been caught; that he had been tried at the assizes in Torna, convicted of desertion and highway robbery, and hanged.

The Diving Bell—its History.

Whosoever originated the diving bell, or whatever the circumstances which led to it, we may imagine that the simple experiment of inverting a hollow vessel over a fluid, and the fact that a portion of the air remaining within the vessel prevented the filling of the same with water, led to the construction of the machine.

The earliest information that we heard of in regard to the diving bell in Europe, is that of an exhibition before the Emperor, Charles V., at Toledo in Spain, in the year 1538. It is said that at this exhibition, which took place in the presence of several thousand spectators, two Greeks let themselves down with a lighted torch under an inverted kettle, and came up again without being wet or having their light extinguished. This, at that early age, was considered a most marvelous feat, and awakened much interest at the time, but we do not learn that any particular use was made of the discovery until the latter part of the seventeenth century, when the diving bell appears to have been employed in more important undertakings—one in particular, which is related by Sinclair, in 1665 was an attempt to recover various article from the remains of a portion of the Spanish Armada which was wrecked on the western coast of Scotland. A few cannon only were recovered from the wrecks, which, however, was sufficient to defray the expenses.

A person named Phipps, some years subsequent to this, formed a project for recovering from a rich Spanish ship which had been sunk on the coast of Hispaniola, the goods and treasure she had on board when she went down. He represented the plan to Charles II, and the king gave him a vessel, and furnished him with every necessary for the undertaking; but he returned without success, although with the firm conviction that the scheme was practicable. Four years afterward, in 1687, under new patronage, Phipps made a second attempt, was successful, and returned to England with the value of $1,000,000, which he recovered from the wreck.

We do not learn, however, that much improvement was made in diving bells until 1717, when Dr. Edmund Halley constructed one three feet broad at the top, five feet at the bottom, and nearly eight feet deep. This machine was made of lead, and heavy enough to sink to the bottom by its own weight. In the top was fitted a thick plate of glass to admit light, and a valve and tube or pipe to admit a free circulation of air. On the inside of the bell a circular seat was placed for the accomdation of the workman, and a stool hung by ropes within the machine, on which they could stand and work. The whole was suspended from a cross beam rigged to the ship's mast.—The air was supplied by large air-tight vessels, into which it was compressed, and let down by ropes, which communicated with the tubes before mentioned, and was forced by the pressure of the surrounding water into the machine. In this Dr H., the inventor, and four of his friends descended to the depth of 60 feet, and remained nearly two hours without inconvenience.

The greatest improvement in the diving bell was, however, made by Mr. Spalding of Edinburgh, by whose ingenuity most of the defects of Dr. Halley's bell were remedied. He invented a method by which the sinking or raising the bell could be governed by those within it, and also added a balance weight which prevented the bell from being overset by rocks, &c., on or near the bottom.

More recently several improvements have been attempted, the last and most elaborate being that of Mr. J. R. Worster of Baltimore' who patented his improvements in 1849.—Farmer and Mechanic.

Spunk and Peril.

There is a story, and which we believe is a fact, of two boys going to a jackdow's nest from a hole under the belfry window in the tower of All-Saint's Church, Derby England. As it was impossible to reach it standing, and equally impossible to reach that height from without, they resolved to put a plank through the window; and while the heavier boy secured the balance by sitting on the end within, the lighter boy was to fix himself on the opposite end, and from that perilous situation to reach the object of their desire. So far the scheme answered. The little fellow took the nest, and finding in it five fledged young birds, announced the news to his companion.

'Five, are there?' replied he; then I'll have three.'

'Nay,' exclaimed the other indignantly; 'I run all the danger and I'll have three.'

'You shall not,' still maintained the boy inside; 'you shall not. Promise me three or I'll drop you.'

'Drop me, if you please,' replied the little hero, 'but I'll promise you no more than two,' upon which his companion slipped off the plank.

Up tilted the end, and down went the boy, upwards of a hundred feet from the ground.—The little fellow, at the moment of his fall, was holding his prize by their legs—three in one hand and two in the other, and they, finding themselves descending, fluttered out their pinions instinctively. The boy, too, had on a carter's frock secured round the neck, which, filling with air from beneath, buoyed him up like a balloon, and he descended smoothly to the ground—when, looking up, he exclaimed to his companion—

'Now you shall have none!' and ran away sound in every limb, to the astonishment of the inhabitants, who, with inconceivable horror, had witnessed his decent.

What would I do.

If I was possessed of the most valuable things in the world, and was about to will them away, the following would be my plan of distribution.

I would will the world (and the rest to mankind) truth and friendship, which are very scarce.

I would give an additional portion of truth to lawyers, traders and merchants!

I would give to physicians skill and learning.

I would give to printers their pay.

To gossipping women short tongues.

To young women, good sense, modesty, and natural teeth.

To young sprouts, or dandies, common, sense, little cash and hard labor.

To old maids, smooth faces, little and good husbands.

To old batchelors, love for virtue, children and wives.

Cholera at the West. The St Louis Republican states that the cholera has broken out in various towns in the interior of Indiania. At Jersyville nine deaths had occurred in a few hours, and the excitement was so great, that thv Circuit Court, which was in session had adjourned.

Three Boys Drowned. Three boys two of them aged nine and fourteen years of age, while engaged in fishing, on Tuesday last, at Braintree, were all drowded. They were last seen on a rock together, and in endenvoring to rescue him, all three lost their lives

Hurl Gate Channel. The New Yorkers are about to take vigerous measures for the removal of the rocks in Hurl Gate channel. Competent engineers have calculated that the necessy work can be done for about $15,000, which will probaly be raisby subscription.

Jenny Lind.—The New York Journal of Commerce states that Jenny Lind will close her farewell concerts in Philadelphia on Monday, June 9th and in Boston on Monday or Tuesday, the 16th and 37th.

The Bloomer in Lowell. Two women who appeared in the street at Lowell on Monday in the new costume was followed by a hundred boys, and took refuge in the house of an acquaintance.—They were surrounded by a curious and noisy crowd, and finally had to send for the police to rescue them, and 'see them home.'

Elopement. On Saturday last, a married man eloped from the town of Lincoln, with a girl of fifteen. The enamered damsel walked to Concord a distance of four miles, to meet her Lothario, with whom she proceedad to Groton junction, where they took the cars to New York. since which nothing has been heard of them.

Race Between a Man and Horse. The race over the Prairie House course came of yesterday, between Jackson, the "American Deer," and the trotting horse Jane Bug, resulted in favor of the former. The provisions of the race were, the horse to trot ten miles while Jackson ran five miles six hundred yards. The horse made the first five miles in thirteen minutes thirty-three seconds, but soon after began to "let down," and was withdrawn at the close of the eight mile. Jackson went his distance inside of twenty-eight minutes. [St. Louis Int.,

Sir John Franklin.—It was six years on Monday last since Sir John Franklin sailed from Sheerness on his dangerons expedition, and the chances of his safety at the present time are but slight indeed.

Powder Mill Blown up. On Tuesday afternoen, the powder mill of Mr. Samuel Hobbs in Barre, Mass, was blown to pieces by the ignition of twenty kegs of powder. An Irishman, named Thomas Doyle, was blown up with the mill. He was afterwards taken up with his clothes stripped off, both legs broken and terribly bruised, but was not dead at last accounts.

Vermont Central House—Corner of Canal & Causway sts. Boston. This popular Establishment has recently undergone extensive repairs and is now, as a house of entertainment, second to none of its class in the city. Its Central situation, being in the immediate vicinity of some of our most popular Railroads—the Maine, Salem, Concord New Hampshire, Lowell, &c renders it, aside from its other attractions—good accomodations, moderate charges and the polite attentions of mine host—a desirable resort for the Travellor and man of business.

CIRCUS. We would call attention to the Advertisement of Messrs. Spalding and Rogers to be found in another column. This Exhibition, we have been assured is the largest and most perfect of the kind ever before presented to the public---uniting Equestrian Gymnastic and Dramatic Talent of the first order,—offering a great variety of interesting and instructive amusement, well worth the moderate price charged for admission.

Strawberries. The Gothamites appear to be in danger of being smothered in strawberries and cream. The steamer John Hart brought to market on Tuesday three hundred barrels all in one cargo Railroad Accident.—A Portland train on the Boston and Maine Railroad on Thursday, run over an Irishman, at the crossing, about two miles this side of Bradford Bridge, litterally cutting the poor fellow in twain.

Fugitive Slave Sims, the returned fugitive has not been sent to Havanna, but a correspondent of the Evening Post says that his owner is trying to sell him, to some planter in the interior.

The citizens of Newburyport, at a town meeting have voted to accept the charter for a city, recently granted by the Legislature. The vote stood, yeas 484, nays 110.

Stephen D. Carey, who murdered the Depot Master at Lincoln, has been convicted of man slaughter and sentenced to twenty years hard labor in the State Prison—the first twenty days to be solitary confinement.

Hard Usage. The Commonwealth states that Gen. Wool was quartered at the Revere House on Tuesday

Pigeons are so numerous in the vicinity of Cleveland, Ohio, that a sharp shooter in a couple of hours will kill a hundred.

At the election in Baltimore, yesterday, there were 3553 majority in favor of the new State Constitution—so that it will doubtless be adopted be the people.

An earthquake occurred at Guadaloupe on the 17th of May. Many houses were destroyed, and the plantations injured throughout the Island.

The Boston Stone for the Washington Monument is on exhibition at City Hall.

Milton Bates was found insensible in the street at New York, having taken laudanum for the purpose of killing himself, but he will propably recover. On his person was found a letter addressed to his sister, Mary Bates, of Hartford Conn, saying:—"Dear Mary, before to-morrow, I am in hell—so good by."

The editor of the Brooklyn Markets a few evenings since, he encountered a meat vender shouting at the top of his lungs—"Ere's you cheap meat for boarders."

The Chinese, living in canal boats, send their ducks ashore, during the day time, to earn their living, and whistle them home at night. The last duck gets a switching: there is, consequently, a duck-race—each one trying not to be last.

Some idea of the cost of a royalty in England may be formed from the fact that the Prince of Wales, though under ten years of age, has a revenue of nearly three hundred thousand dollars per annum from the Duchy of Cornwall.

The Equestrian Statue of Gen. Jackson, which is one third larger than life, weighing thirty-five thousand pounds, and made of brass condemned by Government, is to be placed on the pedestal in Lafayette Square. Washington, opposite the President's House, on the 4th of July.

The Philadelphia North American says that there is a surplus of 250,000 gold dollars now in the Mint. Why are they not distributed?

There are now forty female students in the Female Medical College in Philadelphia. Two of the number hail from Massachusetts.

A $2 bill on a Boston Bank, altered to the denomination of $500 was passed to a State street broker on Tuesday.

A son of the celebrated Dr. Malthus, who propose d to restrict the increase of population in Great Britain, has had fourteen children!

Horace Greely, we perceive, is one of the Chairmen of Jurors who are to make the awards at the grand London exposition.

There were 34 deaths from cholera at New Orleans, during the week ending the 10th inst. and it was also spreading in surrounding places.

The Chinese Ambassador, who made such a figure at the opening of the World's Fair, turned out to be a sailor from a chinese junk lying in the Thames.

Some of Mr Cass's admirers in California have presented him with a gold ring, valued at about four hundred dollars.

POETRY.

THE BETTER LAND.

"I hear thee speak of a better land.
Thou call'st its children a happy band
Mother! O, where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it, and weep no more?
Is it where the flower of the orange blows,
And the fire flies glance through the myrtle boughs?
—"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it where the feathey palm trees rise,
And the date grows ripe under sunny skies?
Or 'midst the green islands of glittering seas,
Where fragrants forest perfume the breeze,
And strange bright birds on their starry wings,
Bear the rich hues of all glorious things?"
—"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Is it far away, in some region old,
Where the rivers wander o'er sands of gold?—
Where the burning rays of the ruby shine,
And the diamond lights up the secret mine.
And the heart gleams forth from the coral strand,
Is it there, sweet mother, that better land,"
—"Not there, not there, my child!"

"Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy!
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy;
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair—
Sorrow and death may not enter there.
Time doth not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
For beyond the clouds, and beyond the tomb,
It is there, it is there, my child!"

THE "USE OF FLOWERS."

God might have bade the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak tree and the cedar tree,
Without a flower at all.

He might have made enough,
For every want of ours,
For luxury, medicine and toil,
And yet have made no flowers.

The ore within the mountain mine
Requireth none to grow,
Nor doth it need the locus flower
To make the river flow.

The clouds might give abundant rain,
The nightly dews might fall,
And herb that keeps th life in man,
Might yet have drunk them all.

Then wherefore, wher efore were they made,
All dyed with rainbow light,
All fashioned with supremest grace,
Up springing day and night.

Spangling in valleys green and low,
And on the mountains high,
And in the silent wilderness,
Where no man presses by.

Our outward life requires them not;
Then wherefere had they birth,
To minister delight to man,—
To beautify the earth,—

To comfort man,—to whisper hope
Whene'er his faith is dim;
For whose careth for the flowers,
Will care much more for him.

FLOW DOWN COLD RIVULET.

Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea;
Thy tribute wave deliver,
No more by thee my steps shall be
For ever and ever.

Flow, softly flow by lawn and lea,
A rivulet, then a river,
No where by thee my steps shall be
For ever, and for ever.

But here will sigh thine alder tree,
And here thine a-pen shiver,
And hear by thee will hum the bee
For ever and for ever.

A thousand suns will stream on thee,
A thousand moons will quiver,
But not by thee my steps shall be
For ever and for ever.

A BIG "IDEE."

'Tis awful grand, I calkerlate,
To sit beside an oak,
And hear these 'tarnal bull-frogs join
In one tremendous—croak.

ANECDOTES.

Why don't you put on a clean shirt?' said a swell the other night to his companion; 'then the girls will smile upon you as they do upon me.—'Everybody can't afford to wear a clean shirt every day as you can,' was the reply. 'Why not?' said white collar, 'because' said soiled collar 'every body's mother is not a wash-woman.'

'How well he plays for one so young,' said Mrs. Partington, as the organ boy and his monkey performer' near her door, 'and how much his dear little brother in the calico dress looks like him to be sure.'

'What say you to taking tha veil?' said a Catholic to his young wife. 'I am content,' see repiiad, 'providing you get me a new bonnet with it.'

A lady happened to say variation instead of variation, seemed offended when informed of the error by a gentlemen, but had good natured restored, when he said, "Madam, heaven forbid that there should be any difference between U. and I."

One quarter of a bed and no clothes is hardiy a woman's share, who has a drunken husband to live with.

MISCELLANY.

Lynch Law in the "Sucker State."

The little incident I am about to relate actually occurred at the place named, and some of the persons engaged in it can testify to the same.

About a mile above the village of C——a, on the opposite bank of the Ohio, and on that part of the Kentucky known as 'The Purchase,' stands an old log cabin, on a rising piece of ground some thirty yards from the river, just out of the reach of the Spring freshets, though at that time it was entirely surrounded by 'back water,' that covered the bottom land for miles above and below. A squatter had formerly kept a wood-yard there though no one appeared to lay claim to the ownership; in fact, it was looked upon and used as public property.

One Sunday afternoon, two long 'dugouts,' loaded with 'plunder,' (a term in the west for baggage &c.) stopped at the cabin, which was then uninhabited, and shortly afterwards a smoke was seen, and several persons to be moving around. This was the family and property of Hank Harris, a large, hickory faced, bushy-headed looking fellow, with his wife and three children. They took up their abode at the old wood yard, and remained about three months. The history of Harris—that is, what little we heard of it—was not calculated to raise him much in the estimation of the inhabitants of C——a.

It was reported by some flat-boat men that 'tied up' one night at the village, that Harris 'had left Paudly 'tween two days, and no one had seen a site on him since;' also that Hank was orful piert hand with his shootin'-iron, and as he never seen ary hog, the folks there thought he et more pork than he paid for 'or cum by on the 'square;' and also, that Harris was one day kindly allowed twenty-four hours to 'pack up an travel.' One day Hank tied his canoe to the Illanois side, and came up to Bill Hughes' store and exchanged some deer-skins for 'store truck —meal, and a jug of 'Ole Recty,' as he called it; that night screams were heard from Harris's cabin, and his boys told us 'Dad had bed trainin' the ole oman with hick'ries,' and as such cries were often heard, both from his wife and boys, Harris began to be shunned and hated. He was, when sober, silent and remorse, and when in liquor which was whenever he could get it, he was quarrelsome and fierce; he has fought several times with some of the villagers, and they generally badly punished. Harris always carried his rifle and hunting-knife with him, which was a common thing in that country, though, as he lived just across the river, he had no use for them. A couple of snarling, ugly curs, always followed him, and he appeared to think more of them than of his children. The people of C——a, were anxious to get rid of him, as some of their hogs had strayed off, and hadn't returned—yet they had not sufficient cause to give him a hint 'to travel.'—They didn't have to wait long, though for one day, while in liquor, he beat and nearly killed an old hunter that was a general favorite with the settlers, having been in all the border wars with the red skins.

Some dozen men met in Bill Hughes' store, and agreed to rid themselves of Harris at once; and, forming themselves into a band of 'Regulators,' under Hughs and Bill Riley, (a large powerful fellow), they laid their plans, and put them into execution at once. Two or three of them lounged into Demmit's store, where Harris was drinking and bantering the bystanders to fight. Bill Riley entered first, and as one of Harris,s dog stood convenient, Riley kicked in a few of his ribs, by way of a starter.

'Cuss you, Bill Riley, wot'd ye kick my dog fur? You'r the biggest man 'mong these yere suckers, but I kes jist knock the 'hind sites' orf er you, or any other sneakin devil in this crowd.'

Bill was a peaceable, honest wood-cutter, and more than a match for Harris when he (Harris) was in liquor; but it was part of the plan for Bill and Harris to quarrel, or Bill would not have kicked his dog.

'Lay down that thar shootin'-iron en knife and you shall swaller that lie or yer teeth, you hog-stealin' cuss!'

'Hoopee! fact, by——!' sung out Bill Hughes.

The tools were laid down on the counter, and they stepped out in front of the store and clinched. A western rough-and-tumble-fight is understood generally to be a 'bite and gouge' affair, and I will leave the description to the imagination of the reader. I never saw a fiercer, and hope I never shall see a more bloody one. Harris soon intimated that Bill needn't chaw his countenance any more, and that he'd 'got 'nuff.'

'I've licked you in a fair fight, Hank Harris and now we're gwine to pay you for 'busin' old uncle Nat. Come, boys.'

'I'll make buzzard's bait of some on ye fust!' yelled Harris, as he sprang to the counter for his knife and pistol. They were gone.

The furious struggle that man made to free himself from the hands of the 'Regulators,' were terrible. Young as I were at the time, I shall never forget them—he raved and cursed most horribly, and fairly foamed at the mouth.

'Boys, fetch some cat-line and a rail—a good sharp 'un,' sang out Riley.

'Yes, and a bar'l of tar and some feathers,' said Hughes.

The two first were easily produced, but tar was not to be had, and as to feathers, the settlers in C——a, were strangers to such luxuries; consequences, they were 'non comatibus in swampo'

'D——n it, boys,' said Hughes, 'go up to my store and roll a bar'l of mllasses; we'll sweeten this hunter of Kentucky.'

'He't gin many a hog the ear ache, said another.

Harris said not a word, but his eyes looked the fierce rage that burned within him, while his teeth were hard set and lips compressed.—The barrel of molasses was brought and the head stove in.

'Now, boys, pick cotton like Mississippi niggers, while we peal him,' said Riley.

Pealed, and with hands and feet tied, Riley and Hughes lifted him, and dipped him, 'candlewise,' several times into the thick molasses.

'Now, then, shut pan, ole feller, or ye'll get sweetened inside and out,' said Hughes as Harris's feet cut a half-circle in the air, and his head disappeared down in the barrel.

'H—ll and furies, you cussed suckers, will ye strangle me?' he sputtered, when his head came to daylight.

'Wal, yes, putty much, I reckon,' said one of the regulators; and down went the bushy head again.

'Thar, you is sweetened,' said Riley.—'Now, boys, we'll gin him the dressin', and the little patches of cotton were plastered on thick.

'Thar, you look like a 'spectacle white man, Hank Harris! Agen'lman in disguise,' said Hughes.

'Jist rite for them Orleans fancy-dress and maskerade balls,' said another.

'If you don't keep a carriage you shall travel by rail-road,' said Riley, as they seated him on the edge of the rail, and tied his hands and feet, and, with one on each side, trotting him about the village, giving him rather more jolting however, than as a passenger on a rail-road, he might expect.

'Thar, boys, we'll gin him a chance to pay his rent in Kentuck, and made swankey of the Ohio,' said Hughes, and they placed him in a skiff, which they rowed to a sandbar near the other shore; here they tied him to an old snag and placed his rifle (without a flint) and knife beside him, and left him there—the Ohio river rising eight inches an hour. As they started for the shore, the regulators sung out—

'You won't shoot nary nurther hog, Hank Harris!'

'Nor gouge old Uncle Nat, I reckon.'

'You wont hick'ry your wife much more, old hoss!'

'Who's buzzards bait now, Hank Harris?'—

'I'll gin yer dogs a pill as 'ill settle their stomicks for em.'

'Buffalo fish is great on cotton, ye know, Harris!'

The next morning the bar was covered, also the snag, and Hank Harris was not to be seen. The Regulators visited his cabin; his family and 'plunder' was gone. He would have undoubtedly been left to perish on the bar, but for his wife, who, notwithstanding his treatment to her, clung to him after dark, released him and, packing up, they floated out of the Ohio and down the muddy Mississippi, and we haver saw them again.

Seth's Dificulty.

Our friend Seth's round, little bullet-shaped head is covered with a profusion of hair of the most sanguine hue. With regard to the color he is very sensitive, and though he cannot disguise it from himself, yet among his friends he entirely scouts the idea that is red, declaring it to be a rich warm auburn. He, however, undertook one time to change its color, and procuring a bottle of newly invented hair dye, he applied it his flaming locks. The dye, however, not assimulating very well with his hair gave it a purplish tinge,—something of a grape color, which was far from becoming; and then it was a great trouble to apply it evenly; and furthermore, his dyeing it was considered by his friends as a tacit acknowledgement of its redness, so he came to the conclusion of letting it remain as nature furnished it.

But there was another trouble, for the dye in wearing off, left some places sooner than others, thus leaving his head covered with spots of black, red, purple and the intermediate shades, like the head of a leopard. But in the course of time it was all removed, and 'Richard was himself again.'

One morning after having been under the hands of a ton-sorial professer, he returned to his boarding-house, and exclaimed triumphantly to the boarders who had so often twitted him on his sanguine hair,—

'I knew my hair wasn't red—though I was mistaken about its being auburn. What color do you think Cutter, the hair dresser, says it is?'

'Red! red! red! decidedly red!' chimed the boarders in chorus.

'Red!' cried Seth indignantly, 'no such thing; Cutter knows better than that—he says it's French brown.'

'French brown, ha, ha, ha, ha, no, no, it's red, no gainsaying that; fast colors, warranted not to fade.'

Seth, however, maintained with great pertinacity that it was not so, but not succeeding in bringing the others to his opinion, he retired to his room.

* * * * *

The other day, Seth, attired in his Sunday-go-to-meetings, and looking extremely killing, at least in his own estimation, sallied forth for a promenade. In the course of his peregrinations he passed a little urchin, who, with a Cochituate hose, was amusing himself with squirting the water in fantastic curves, and playing the deuce generally. No sooner did the rascal catch a glimpse of our friend's head, than with eyes sparkling with devilry, he aimed the nozzle in that direction, and turning the screw, let on a full stream of water.

Seth is naturally of a pacific disposition, more inclined to suffer wrong quietly than to retaliate, and even further, carries out the divine precept of returning good for evil; but this outrage was more than could be borne, and it was pardonable in Seth to feel a little riled at this unlooked for damper to his enjoyments; so turning to the boy, he was about to chastise him, but the boy yelled most lustily against such a proceeding.

'What'n thunder are you goin to lick me for?' said he, 'I thought yer head was a'fire, and I was trying to put it out, that's all.'

Seth, very much put out, put for home, fully convinced now that his hair was red.—Carpet Bag.

How Fortunes are Made.

No person, who has not investigated the matter, can be aware of the effect of small savings and small spendings, when long continued, upon men's fortunes.—What laborer is there, who with good health, may not save fifty dollars a year? And yet this trivial sum, compounded with only six per cent interest, amounts to six hundred and fifty dollars in ten years, eighteen hundred in twenty, three thousand nine hundred and fifty in thirty, and 7700 in forty years. This fortune, a comfortable porvision, to say at least for the future, to a man sixty years of age, may be accumulated by saving only thirteen and three fourths cents per pay.

It is not uncommon to see families side by side, equal in numbers and industry, living apparently in the same, and possessing so far as the public can judge, the same sources of prosperity, whereof the one grows wealthy and the other labors under the continual pressure of debts and pecuniary embarrassments. The old proverb that some men are born with silver spoons in his mouths, and others with wooden ones, is often resorted to as the explanation of such mysteries. The truth is, that what appears a mystery when examined a little more closely, is no mystery at all. Thirteen or fourteen cents a day may slip through a man's fingers almost imperceptibly not only to others, but to himself. He may keep an invisible bad habit, which will cost him twice that sum daily, and which he will never think of, as a considerable source of expense.

A very temperate and worthy man, after each meal, calls regularly at the next hotel for a few moments, and smokes a cigar which costs him three cents. From thirty to seventy years of age, he continues this practice. This expenditure, with the accumulated interest upon it, will at that time amount to more than nine thousand dollars! And if after an enterprising and industrious life, he has accumulated that sum, he will in almost any country town, be reputated wealthy.

A fortune of one hundred and forty-five thousand may be acquired in fifty years, by earning and keeping safely invested eight shillings and three pence New England currency per day.

The American Grace Darling.

The New York Sunday Messenger notices a young and interesting woman, residing within sixty miles of New York, who has with the assistance of an aged and infirm father, saved twenty-one lives within the last fifteen years. The following particulars are given —:

'Kate Moore is the daughter of Capt. Moore who keeps the lighthouse on Fairweather Island situated midway between the harbors of Black Rock and Bridgeport, Conn. The island contains five acres of land, and is about half a mile from the shore. Many disasters, it is known, have happened to vessels driving round Montauk Point in a storm, and this lady's ear is so accurate, it is said she can distinguish the shrieks of the drowning marriner, and direct her barque in the darkest night, to the relief of the sufferers. Our informant adds that she is a highly accomplished and literary lady, and perfectly feminine in her manners. We also understand that Capt. Moore and his worthy helpmate have resided upon the Island for twenty years, and brought up a family of five children, upon a salary of three thousand a year, all of whom have an excellent education, and that they entertain a great many persons who visit the Island, with true, old fashioned hospitality.'

Paying an Old Debt.

Working out debt is often called 'working a dead horse,' and we think not inaptly, the more especially when a man is poor, with a family depeding upon him for support; then a pick-axe becomes a weary thing, and every shovel-full of dirt weighs four times as much as when the heart of the laborer is cheered by the hope of the dollar ahead. But it is well to pay one's debts; though it is far better to owe nothing, a piece of advice that Saint Paul utters with great earnestness, as if he were practically sensible of the disadvantage of indebtedness. A man who had run up a long score at a shop, for liquor, cigars and other creature comforts, found himself utterly unable to pay a stiver of it. In vain was he urged to pay the bill, and in vain was he threatened if he didn't; he hadn't any money—the true secret of his getting in debt in the first place—and the creditor gave it up. At last he thought he would compromise the matter, and let the man work the debt out. The creditor had a large pile of wood in his barn several cords of it nicely sawed and split, and he forthwith set the debtort at work to throw the wood into the street and then pile it back again, at the rate of a shiling an hour, until the whole debt should be wipod out. The man took hold with a will, and in a short time the wood was all in the street; then it went back with equal celerity, and then out again and then in; everybody wondering what it could mean some charatably intimated that he was crazy, and others equnlly charitable, said he was drunk. He toiled on thus the whole day, throwing the wood back and forth but every hour seemed full sixty minutes longer than its predecessor, as he watched the clock on the old church in the neighborhood. He was working a dead norse and it was hard making him go. But the longest road must have an end, and the hour neared when the labor and debt would cease together, and as the hammer of the clock toled the hour of his release, the freed man threw the last stick of wood into the street with a shout of triumph. The shout brought the owner of the wood to the door, who found his late debtor putting on his coat to go away. 'Hallo!' said he, 'you are not going away without putting the wood back again, are you?' 'I'll put it back for a shilling an hour,' said the man. The proprietor of the wood saw that he had been done, but good-naturedly told his late debtor to go ahead and put it back. He went about it, but strange to say, it took him just three times as long to put it back as it did to throw it out.—Carpet Bag.

Obeying Orders.

A certain general of the United States army supposing his favorite horse dead, ordered an Irishman to go and skin him.

'What! is Silvertale dead?' asked Pat.

'What's that to you?' replied the officer. 'Do as I bid you, and ask no questions.'

Pat went about his business, and in an hour or two returned.

'Well, Pat, where have you been to all this time?' asked the general.

'Skinning the horse your honor.,

'Does it take nearly two hours to perform such an operation?'

'No, your honor, but then you see it took about half an hour to catch him.'

'Catch him! fire and furies, was he alive?'

'Yes, your honor and you know I couldn't skin 'im alive.'

'Skin him alive! did you kill him'

'To be sure I did; you know I must obey your orders without asking any questions.'

Hints to Farmers.

A bare pasture inriches not the soil, nor fattens the animals, nor increases the wealth of the owner.

One animal well fed is better than two poorly kept.

The better animals can be fed, and the more profitable they are—and all farmers work for profit.

Ground once well placed is better than thrice poorly.

Bountiful crops are more profitable than poor ones. Make the soil rich, pulverize it well and keep it clean, and it will generally be productive.

Weeds that grow unmolested around the fences, stumps, and stones, scatter their seeds over the farm, and are very likely to grow.

Cows well fed in winter give more milk in summer. An ox that is in good condition in the spring will perform more labor, and stand the heat of summer much better than one that is poor.

When you see the fence down put it up; if it remains until to-morrow, the cattle may get over.

What ought to be done to-day, do it, for to-morrow it may rain.

A strong horse will work all day without food but keep him at it and he will not last long.

A rich soil will produce good crops without manure, but will soon tire.

Farmer's sons had better learn to hold the plow and feed tue pigs, than than to measure tape and count buttons.

Young ladies who have the good fortune to become farmers' wives will find it more profitable to know how to make Johnny cake and cheese, than to play on the piano.

All who wish to be rich must spend less than they earn.

The Humors of a Kentuckian Judge.

Story telling is a charm of all times and everywhere, most particularly during a tedious journey by steamboat. The following was caught afloat;

Lousville Ky. boasts of one of the most learned and one of the wisest judges to be found upon the bench in the country. His judicial lore brilliantly illumines the decisions at law in that state, which will be precedents for all coming time. At home he is the shrewd, sound, dignified, lawyer, every where the judge, nothing more or less. At heart he is something more. Sam Slick is not alone in his calling, for if one Judge Longstreet would but write a book, the world would laugh, and the Canadian would be eclipsed.

'On our way to charleston,' says the relater of this veracious story, Judge Longstreet, after a long silence, says to me—'Brown, although good friends as we are, let us travel strangers together until we return home.' This seemed a strange impression coming from so intimate an aquaintance, and I knew not what to make of it. The Judge was either crazy or bent upon a spree. I had no choice but to assent to the strange proposition, for from that moment the mantle of the Judge was left behind, and he who was wont to fill it and lend grace and dignity to the same, such as commanded the reverence of all men, was the rawest and most uncouth Kentuckian extant. Innumerable were the jokes and tricks upon travellers, that kept me in a constant roar of laughter until we returned home.

He shuffles his long gawky form into the ladies' parlor at the clerk's hotel where we stopped; he then drew the damask chair up to the polished fender, upon which he placed his feet and deposited his quid upon the hearth. The ladies began to spread. Don't move, ladies; don't trouble yourselves; it's only I, just in from Old Kentuck.' With hat, coat and mittens on, he leisurly surveyed the primises to the very figures in the carpet, commenting to himself upon each article—'Wall, that's some pumpkins!' 'Brave, ain't it?' 'Con, cowcumbers and all, by pepper corn!' 'A right smart place they've got down here!' 'What may be the price of corn, mam, where they tread such mighty fine things under feet?' This abrupt question, added to the fair ones all to flight.

The landlord soon made his appearance, and politely informed his customer that he had made a mistake; that he was out of place in that room. 'You don't tho' stranger, you can't come that old hoss! Ain't this ere a tavern?'

Upon being made to understand his place, he consented to sit by the office fire.

'You name, sir, in that book.'

'No, you can't come that ere on this child, no how, for more reasons than one, I tell you, sir ee. I promised the old man I never would ride anybody's paper; the old coon did that himself, bust up, and left the young 'uns to go root. That's one reason. I can't write; that's another reason. I han't got no name, and that's t'other reason.'

At supper our greenhorn jaunts down near the table among the ladies, where it was thought safest by the servants to him.

'Ta au caffa?' inquires the French waiter.

'Yes, sir.'

'Ta au caffa sur?' Again the question is put.

'Yes, sir.'

The puzzled fellow brings a cup of each, which is deliberately placed upon each side of his plate. Beef steak, ham, eggs and everything else passed by the waiters was piled upon his plate. This operation attracted the attention of those near him at the table. One prudish old maid twisted her faded visage into something like a sneer, while she fixed her panther eyes upon the overloaded plate of the apparently green Kentuckian.

'Wait a minute mam, and mixing the incongruous mass of edibles together, he passed it over to the owner of the eyes that were supposed to covert the same. First a titter and finally a broad ha! ha! rolled sown the company, and then the vanquished vestal left the table.

Rules of Life.

1. Never do to-day what can be put off until to-morrow. If you should die in the interval, it will be a great consolation to know that you saved your time,—and time is money.

2. Borrow all the money that you can and pay back as little as possible. The person who loans money is a fool, and deserves to be taught wisdom by a rough process, which you, as a good citizen, are bound to do your utmost to see inflicted upon him.

3. Never lend money, not even to your dearest friend. It is'nt safe. Your friend may die or he may think it is his duty to teach you the folly of lending money, which is one's best friend.

4. Take and read all the newspapers, but never pay for any of them. The licentiousness of the press deserves to be rebuked. If newspaper editors could collect all their bills, and become rich, as in such event they might, they would be so poweful as to be able to rule the country. What they call the 'fourth estate' in England would become the state here.

5. Never give away a cent in what is foolishly called charity. Every person applying for assistance may be an impostor, and it as sound a rule in morals as it is in law that you should have the benefit of any doubt that exists. By giving money to beggar you encourage idleness, and injure the industrious.

6. Never go near the sick, and especially do not watch with them. Who knows but that you may yourself contract di ease by so doing? If a friend has the small pox, you can say that you never were vaccinated deeming a precaution like that a flagrant distrust of the care of Providence.

7. Observe all the laws that do not go to limit your powers, your powers of action or restrain the indulgence of your passions. Such as do either of these things are obviously wrong, and therefore to be disregarded.

8. Be very earnest in your opposition to evils that exist a great distance from your home, but pay no attention to such as exist around you. Were you to trouble yourself about these latter, you might give to the respectable people who have either neglects to extirpate them or who are directly interested in their continuance.

9. Never seek to deliver from danger any person who has fallen overboard, or got under the heels of a horse; you may get drowned yourself, or have your brains kicked out.—Carpet Bag.

Our Life-time.

When the world was created, and all creatures assembled to have their life-time appointed, the ass first advanced, and asked how long he would have to live.

'Thirty years,' replied Nature; 'will that be agreeable to thee?'

'Alas!' Remember what a wearisome existence mine will be; from morning until night I shall have to bear heavy burdens, dragging corn sacks to the mill, that others may eat bread, while I have no encouragement nor be refreshed with anything but blows and kicks. Give me but a portion of that time, I pray!'

Nature was moved with compassion, and presented to him but eighteen years. The ass went away comforted, and the dog came forward.

'How long dost thou require to live?' asked Nature; 'thirty years were too long for the ass, but will thou be contented with them?'

'Is it thy will that I should?' replied the dog. 'Think how much I shall have to run about; my feet will not last for so long a time; and, when I have lost my voice for barking, and my teeth for biting, what else shall I be fit for but to lie in a corner and growl?'

Nature thought he was right and gave him twelve years. The ape then approached.

'Thou wilt, doubtless, willingly live the thirty years,' said Nature; 'thou wilt not have to labor as the ass and the dog. Life will be pleasant to thee.'

'Ah, no!' cried he; so it may seem to others, but it will not be! Should puddings ever rain down, I shall have no spoon! I shall not be able to endure for thirty years.'

Nature was gracious and he received but ten.

At last came man, healthy and strong, and asked the measure of his days,

'Will thirty years content?'

'How short a time!' exclaimed man; 'when I shall have built my house, and kindle a fire on my own hearth—when the trees I shall have planted are about to bloom and bear fruit—when life will seem most desirable, I shall die.

Oh, Nature! grant me a longer period!'

'Thou shalt have the eighteen years of the ass besides.'

'That is not yet enough,' replied man.

'Take then likewise the twelve years of the dog.'

'It is not yet sufficient,' reiterated man; give me more!'

'I give the, then the ten years of the ape; in vain wilt thou crave more!'

Man departed dissatisfied.

Thus man lives seventy years. The first thirty of his life are his human years and pass swiftly by. He is then healthy and happy—he labors cheerfully, and rejoices in his existence. The eighteen years of the ass come next, and burden upon burden is heaped upon him; he carries the corn that is to feed others, and blows and kicks are the wages which he receives for faithful service. The twelve years of the dog follow, and he loses his teeth and lies in a corner and growls. When these are gone, the ape's ten years form the conclusion. The man weak an silly becomes the sport of children

Another grand feature of this Company, and never heretofore attempted by any other Travelling Establishment, is the addition to the equestrian Troup of a complete

DRAMATIC CORPS,

By the aid of whom will be represented Every night a very interesting Patriotic National Drama, called

The Spirit of 76!

Introducing several Thriling Scenes from the Lives of the Immortal Revolutionary Heroes, Old Put!—General Washington! and Mad Anthony Wayne!

The whole concluding with a GRAND LIVING TABLEAU, in which the

"FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY"

MOUNTED ON HIS CHARGER, is Borne Aloft in triumpkal procession, on a platform on THE SHOULDERS OF HIS BRAVE CONTINENTALS!

POETRY.

THE OLD CLOCK.

Placed against the oaken wall,
Stood the old clock, grim and tall;
Children with their, earnest eyes,
Looked upon its mysteries,
Marked the swinging pendulum's tick,
Laughed to hear the clock's deep click,
For to them it seemed to say,
Like a kind old friend, alway,
Play! play!
Play! play!
Live in sunshine while you may,'

Marking moments speed away,
Ticked the old clock, day by day;
When the evening shadows crept
O'er the household, and they slept,
Sounding though the silent hall,
Earnestly its tone would fall;
Some, perchance, might wake to weep,
Some their vigils lone to keep—
"Sleep! sleep!
Sleep! sleep!"
Ticked the clock in accents deep.

While the golden moments flew,
By the ingle-side sat two,
But an hour ago so gay—
Silent, blissful lovers they,
Looking with an earnest gaze
On the hearth-fire's cheerful blaze;
Yet his glance would oftimes rove
To her soft eyes, like a dove.
"Love! love!
Love! love!"
Ticked the watchful clock above?

Time sped on, and alone.
Where the hearth fire late had shone,
Sat a young wife silently,
Watching how the hours rolled by;
As she listened to the blast
Sweep the creeking casement past,
With the clock's monotonous hum,
Beat her heart, "like a muffled drum."
"Come! come!
Come! come!"
Ticked the swinging pendulum.

Time sped on; a watcher pale
Listened to to the wind's deep wail,
Well he knew his gentle bride,
Sad and broken-hearted, died,
Widely, coldly he had strayed
All her heart's young love betrayed—
Sat he at her coffin's head,
Where the sable pall was spread.
"Dead! dead!
Dead! dead?"
So his heart and the old clock said?

Time sped on, and years have flown,
And the old house stands alone,
Ivy mantles round it thick,
And the old house stands alone,
Ivy mantles round it thick,
And the clock has ceased to tick—
Where are all the eyes of light,
Of the household band to night?
Where the hopes of Childhood's morn,
And Young Love's delicious dawn?
Gone; gone!
Gone? gone?
So my heart beats sadly on be

A SONG

Truce to thy fond misgiving,
The fruitless tears give o'er—
No absence can divide us, love,
No parting part us more?
Mountains and seas may rise between
To Mock our baffled will,
But heart in heart, and soul in soul,
We bide together still

Where'er I go, as far or near,
I cannot be alone:
The hand pressed in my own.
They head upon my pillow rests
Thy wores my bosom thrill;
And heart in heart and soul in soul,
We bide together still.

And when stern Death shall work
And all eur joys are done,
E'en by the mystery that unites
The dial and the sun;
Thovgh one eqist in heavenly bliss,
One in this world of jil,
Yet heart in heart and soul in soul,
We'll bide together still.

ANECDOTES.

An absent minded editor having courted a girl and applied to her father, the old man said;
"Well you want my daughter—what sort of a settlement will you make? What will you give her?"
"Give her?" replied the other looking up vacantly, "O, I'll give her a puff."
"Take her," repled the father.

"See here! how long will locust rails last?" inquired a traveller of a western urchin, while riding past a very long stride of fence made of this material.
"They'll last forever,' responded the boy, in a confident tone.
"Forever?" exclaimed the stranger—"how do you know that?"
"Why, my father tried it twice, and I guess I ought to know by this time," said the lad, very gravely.

At a trial, somewhere in Vermont, the defendant who was not familliar with the mulitude of words which the law employs to make a very trifling charge after listening awhile to the reading of the indictment, jumped up and said; "Them 'ere allegations is falsc, and that 'ere allegator knows it?"

MISCELLANY.

The Mouse.

About eight years ago, being in the daily habit of descending into the coal mines of the Newcastle district, I one day caught a half-grown mouse, at the extremety of a gallery into which the little animal had retreated as I advanced towards it (a situation by the way, in which I saw a rat, by which the mines are also infested, turn round and attack a boy.)—Now, as no cat up to that period been introduced into the mines, I dete mined to carry home my prisoner for the purpose of observing his deportment on being brought into the presence of his formidable and natural emeny. In order, however, that he might regain his self-possession after being introduced to the light of day, which in all probability he had never seen before, I kept him confined in a glass lantern for a few days, where he soon became so tame as to eat in my presence. In order that he might enjoy a still more extensive view of surrounding objects, I fixed a piece of stick about nine inches long into the socket of the lantern, upon which the little fellow very soon mounted; and after finishing his meals, he usually amused himself on his perch, by licking all accessible parts of his body—In this way he was engaged, on the fifth or sixth day of his capture, when I introduced a young cat into the room; she very soon discovered the lantern and its contents, which was placed on a table, and dashed at it with all the ferocity of a tiger. To my surprise and amusement, my youthful prisoner continued his ablutions with all the coolness imaginable, without even condescending to notice the furious efforts of the cat to break the glass and devour him. This experiment was frequently renewed for the amusement of my friends, and invariably with the same results. Shortly afterwards I carried the little naimal again in to the coal mines, and set him free. It most be obvious that the mouse could not be aware that the glass of the lantern afforded him a sufficient protection; it did appear to me at the time, that he had no natural or instinctive dread of the cat.

Singing of Birds.

The singing of most birds seems entirely a spontaneous effusion, produced by no lassitude in muscle, or relaxation on the parts of action. In certain seasons and weather, the nightingale sings all day, and most of the night; and we never observe that the powers of song are weaker, or that the notes became harsh and untunable, after all these hours of practice.—The song thrush, in a mild, most April, will commence his tune early in the morning, pipe unceasingly through the day, yet, at the close of eve, when he retires to rest, there is no obvious decay in his musical powers, or any sensible effort required to continue his harmony to the last. Birds of one species sing in general very like each other, with different degree of execution. Some countries may produce finer songsters, but without great variation in the notes. In the thrush however, it is remarkable that there seem to be regular notes, each individual piping a voluntary of his own. Their voices may always be distinguished amid the choristers of the corpse, yet some one performer will more particularly engage attention by a peculiar modulation of tone; and should several stations of these birds be visited, the same morning, few or none probably would be found to persevere in the same round of notes; whatever is uttered seeming the effusion of the moment. At times a strain will break out perfectly unlike any preceeding utterance, and we may wait a long time without noticing any repetition of it. Harsh, strained, and tense, as the notes of this bird are, yet they are pleasing from their variety. The voice of the blackbird is infinitely more yellow, but has much less variety, compass, or execution; and he, too, commences carols with the morning light, persevering from hour to hour without effort, or any sensible faltering of voice. The cuckoo wearies us throughout some long may morning with the unceasing monotony of its song; and though there are others as vociferous, yet it is the only bird I know that seems to suffer from the use of the organ of voice. Little exertion as the few notes it makes use of seem to require, yet, by the middle or end of June, it losses its utterance, becomes hoarse, and ceases from any further essay.—[Journal of a Naturalist.

John Hancock.

Among the remarkable men whose names will forever stand part and parcel of 'Declaration of Independence,' Hancock, whose bold signature first strikes the eye, was perhaps all things considered, one of the most remarkable. He put most at risk, so far as fortune and its appliances were concerned, for he was the richest man in the country. He inherited the business and fortune of a millionaire merchant uncle, and was the Abbot Lawrence of his day. When he was first elected to the provincial Legislature, Adams said to a friend, 'Boston has done a wise thing to-day—she's made that young man's fortune her own;' and the prophecy was literally fulfilled, for it was all devoted to the public use.

The contrast between him and Adams was very great; Adams was poor and held in great contempt the style and show of fortune. Hancock kept a magnificent equipage, such as is not known in America; his apparel was embroidered with gold and silver: he rode with six beautiful bays—he was fond of dancing, music, routs, parties, rich wine, dinners and all that class of things, called elegant pleasures.

How he estimated the goods of fortune and their concomitants, in comparison with the cause of liberty, is illustrated by the following anecdote:—

During the siege of Boston, General Washington consulted Congress as to the propriety of bombarding the town. Hancock was President and after the reading of Washington's letter a motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole, to enable Mr. Hancock to give his opinion, as he was deeply interested—all his property being in a houses and real chairman as follows:—'It is true, sir, that nearly all I have in the world is in the town of Boston; but if the explusion of the British troops and the libertues of my country demand that they be burnt to ashes, issue the order, and let the cannon blaze away.'

These men were made for the times, cool, steady and deliberate principles, show in them all, they were ready for 'the spoiling of their goods,' to ensure us a better inheritance.

When Lieutenant Governor Patterson was the Speaker of the Legislature—as is usual at the opening of the House, some dozen boys presented themselves, as applicants for the place of messengers. He inquired their names, and into their conditions, in order to to the proper selection. He came in the course of examination, to a small boy about ten years old, bright looking lad.

'Well sir,' said he, 'what is your name?'

'John Hancock, sir,' replied the boy with promptness.

'What said the Speaker. 'you did not sign the Declaration of Independence, did you?'

'No sir,' replied the lad stretching himself up to his utmost proportions, 'but I would if I had been there.'

'You can be one of the Messengers,' said Govenor Paterson

The Printer and the Dutchman.

A journeyman printer lately set out on foot for the interior of Ohio, a distance of five hundred miles, with an old brass rule, and three dollars cash in his pocket. He soon found himself in Pennsylvania, and being weary, called at the inn of a Dutchman, whom he found quietly smoking his pipe, when the following dialouge ensued.

'Vell, Mishter Valking Sthick, vat you vant?'

'Refreshments and repose.'

'Supper and lodgin, I reckon.'

'Yes, sir, supper and lodging.'

The Mother's Last Lesson.

'Will you please teach me my verse, mamma and then kiss me, and bid me good night?' said little Rodger L——, as he opened the door and peeped cautiously into the chamber of his sick mother; 'I am very sleeply, but no one has heard me say my prayers.'

Mrs. L——was very ill—indeed, her attendants believed her to be dying. She sat propped up with her pillows, and struggling for breath; her eyes were growing dull and glazed. She was a widow and little Rodger was her only—her darling child. Every night he had been in the habit of coming into her room, and sitting in her lap, or kneeling by her side, while she repated passages from God's holy word or related to him stories of the good and wise men spoken of in its passages.

'Hush!' said a lady who was watching beside her couch. 'Your dear mother is too ill to hear you to night.' As she said this she came forward and laid her hand gently upon his arm, as if she would lead him from the room. Roger began to sob as if his heart would break.

'I cannot go to bed without saying my prayers—indeed I cannot.'

The ear of the dying mother caught the sound. Although she had been nearly insensible to everything transpiring around her, the sob of her darling aroused her stupor, and turning to a friend she desired her to bring her little son and lay him on her bosom. Her request was granted and the child's rosy cheek and golden head nestled beside the cold pale face of his dying mother.

'Rodger, my son, my darling child,' said the dying woman, 'repeat this verse after me, and never, never forget it;' 'when my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up.' The child repeated it two or three times distinctly, and said his little prayer. Then he kissed the cold and almost rigid features before him, and went quietly to his little couch. The next morning he sought as usual, his mother, but found her stiff and cold.

This was her last lesson. He has never forgotten it—he probably never will. He has grown to be a man—a good man, and now occupies a post of honor and profit in Massachusetts. I never could look upon him without thinking about the faith so beautifully exhibited by his dying mother.

Give Your Child a Newspaper.

A child begining to read becomes delighted with a newspaper, because he reads the names of things which are familiar and will make progress accorningly. A newspaper in one year is worth a quarters schooling to a child, and every father must consider that substantial information is connected with advancement. The mother of a family, being one of its heads, and having a more immediate charge of children, should herself be instructed. A mind occupied becomes fortified against the ills of life, and is braced for any emergancy. Children amused by reading or study, are of course more considerate and more easily governed. How many thoughtless young men have spent their earnings in a tavern or grogshop, who ought to have been reading? How many parents who have not spent twenty dollars for books for their families, would have given thousands to reclaim a son or a daughter who had ignorantly and thoughtlessly fallen into temptation?

The Two Brothers, or Peace and Good Neighbohood.

The visitor to the banks of the Wye must doubtless have remarked the high hill, upon which rises the village of Sellack. The path leading to it from the neighboring meadows is as steep as if intended to reach the clouds, and caused the magistrate of the place to give it the name of Jacob's Ladder. At the top of the hill stood the church, which from the distance served as a guide to the straying traveller; around it were scattered the dwellings of the inhabitants, stationed on the different platforms of the green hill, the nests in the wide branches of a lofty cedar.

At its foot, not far from Jacob's Ladder, were two small farms, separated by a hedge of elder trees. The two cottages, so exactly resembling each other in their neatly whitewashed walls, in the thatched roofs, in the casements round which hung the honeysuckle in fragrant clusters, came upon the eye as twin sisters, so alike in garb and features as scarcely to be distinguished from each other.

In truth, both were built at the same time, by Tom and Jones Basham; not even a hedge divided them first. There was a little seperation between the hearts of the two brothers; but their close neighborhood soon gave rise to innumerable quarrels, and, at the time our reital begins, the Bashams had long ceased to hold any interourse with each other. Perhaps they no longer even entertained any affection for each other—for hearts which have parted in anger unconsciously become embittered. We fill up with reproach and censure the void which wounded affection has left in our hearts, and by incessantly complaining to ourselvas of those we have loved, we at length think we are quite right in hating them.

No one could tell the cause of quarrels which originating in some ebulition of temper about some trifle, and fomented by mutual recimination, and by the injudicious interference of a third party ended in an open rupture. It unfortunately happened just at the time that a fresh dispute arose between them about a piece of ground, which had to be decided by law, and though a fair and equitable division was made, both parties left the court still more exasperated—for it is love, not justice, that softens animosity and soothes angry feelings.

If then, the impossibility of reconciliation between the Bashams had become, so to speak a thing of public notory, all those who had failed in their endeavors to bring it about declared the thing was hopeless. 'Had not his Worship's exhortation being perfectly useless? Had not farmer Soker got drunk three times in a vain attempt to make them take a glass together? Had not even Bosin herself invited the two wives to her house, under pretext of teaching them to make gooseberry wine, without being able to prevail upon them to shake hands?' But none of them seemed to remember that he who would reconcile friends must make his appeal to feeling, not reason. Divided hearts can only be reunited by gently touching some spring of feeling common to each.

Such was the state of things when the curate of the parish arrived one day at the dwelling of Jones Basham. He was an excellent man; he had no family, but his parishioners were his children, and he was as welcome to every house as a gleam of sunshine in winter. His words were grave and gentle and even the rudest of his flock felt he knew not why, his heat softened by a visit from him. To be with him seemed like the inhaling of a purer atmosphere, soothing, and cheering, and bracing His was, indeed, pure undefiled religion.

Jones Basham received the young pastor, as he was everywhere received with a respectful and cordial welcome. The children were brought to him, and as he smilingly spoke to them, and stroked there little heads, stood timidly by his side, now and again stealin a glance at them through their long eyelashes. Taking the eldest by the hand he said—

'I have a favor to ask of you George.'

The little one loked up with surprise.

'To-morrow is Palm Sunday, and I have chosen you to distribute the loaves.'

'I, sir!' exclaimed the child, crimsoning with pleasure.

'Yes, you! come early, that I may show you what you are to do.'

The child seemed as if he longed to thank him, but stood twiling his cap and turning up the gravel with his foot till the father came to his relief by warmly expressing his sense of the honor.

'The pastor now accompanied Jones through his farm which he examined minuately, inquiring into Basham's plans, and pointed out several alterations which Basham agreed with him would be an improvement, but declared his utter inability to carry them out. 'A hundred pounds,' said he would be necessary, and I have not so much avaible, and as to borrowing it, it will set me hard to work to meet my actual liabilities.'

'But the Lord has been pleased to grant you your health,' said the pastor; 'you are more fortunate in this respect than your brother Tom who for the last month has been far from well.'

Is he sufferiug much?' inquired Jones, in a tone of embarreasment.

'I do not know—he expressed a wish to see me to-day. I am afraid he is careless about himself—he labors just as much as formerly, though experience ought to have made him wiser. If I am not mistaken, it was over exertion that killed your father?'

'It was, indeed,' said Jones, affected by the recollection; 'but why does he not consult a physician?'

'I have tried to persuade him to do so, but have no one in this village and he thinks his illness too trifling to send for advice to the neighboring town; so that there is no chance of managing the matter, unless a doctor should by any accident pass by or be sent for by some one else in the village. Unfortunately it may be some time before such an oppertunity occurs and Tom's illness may increase, however, I hope his youth and good constitution may carry him through it.'

So saying, the curate, having now arrived at the gaiden gate, took leave of Jones Besham and repaired to his brother's. Arrived there he announced te little Fanny, whom he met as he was entering the house, that she should next day help in the annual distribution of bread in the chuch. Fanny, not a whit less proud or happy than George, ran to tell her father of the honor intended her by the curate. Tom soon appeared to thank the young pastor who made most particular enquiries about his health. The farmer was still suffering, but seemed not much less occupied with illness, than with a legacy his wife had just had left, her and immediately began to consult the curate as to the the comparative security of different banks in which he proposed to put the money.

The curate advised him, in the first instance, to pay off all incumbrances on his farm, and to make some improvements in it which he himself pointed out.

'I have just given the same advice to your brother Jones,' added the pastor, 'and he would gladly fellow it, only that he is in sad want of money.'

'I belie e,' observed Tom, 'he has met with some heavy losses within these last two years past.'

'I fear that he is much prassed just now, added the curate, 'and, to judge by appearance the legacy you have just received would have been more wanting to him than to you.'

When the curate left Tom remained a long time thoughtful. His brother was in want of money, whilst he had a sum of which he was actually at a loss to dispose. Formerly, had such a thing happened, it would have been long before he would have taken the leathern purse which contained his gutneas to his brother Jones, and said to him, 'You may have as much as you want, brother, and take a memorandum of what you keep.' But now his offer would have been rejected, and this he felt he could not brook, or looked upon as advance on his part which he would have dreaded still more.

Nevertheless, to leave Jones without help, if he were really in want, was very hard. Even were every spark of affection extinct in the hearts of the two brothers, the honor of Bashams would not permit that one should see the other in poverty, or unable to meet his engagements. The heart is no less quick in finding a pretext for kindness than it has for anger, and Tom, whilst fancying he still preserved all his old rancor against Jones, passed the night in devising how he could manage to be of use to his brother.

Jones, on his side, was not less pre-occupied—The few words let fall by the curate, relative to his brother's health, weighed upon his mind. The more he thought upon Tom's illness the more his alarm increased. He feared it would become dangerous, and was uneasy at the little care he took of himself. He knew Tom had always been imprudent, not only taking no precautions against the attacks to which he was subject, but when they did come, appearing to look upon them as a guest whom, though unwelcome, it would be too troublesome to attempt to dislodge. Any precautions that he did take were always forced upon him by Jones, who was himself a bit of a doctor. He was consulted by the villagers about their own corns, and their children's whooping coughs and chilblains and concocted drinks renowned through the village. He had acquired this medical knowledge from his wife's brother, who was a doctor and every year spent a few days at the farm. Jones saw he sould, by a latter, bring him to Sellack, where he might see his brother and judge of the state of his health. But how would his visit be received by the latter? Would he not look upon it as an attempt at a reconciliation—as an indirect advance? Jones could not bear the thought.

This thought was passed by both brothers in uncertainty and doubt.

Meanwhile George and Fanny awoke before day brak, full of the ceremony in which they were to play so conspicuous a part. Dressed in their best, they repaired to the church with their respective families, who, for this day, were to occupy the seats of honor near the communion table tables. Jones and Tom had always carefully avoided each other in the church; and it was with no small emotion that they found themselves side by side in the same pew. The face of both flushed, as both at first instinctively drew back, and then, as if actuated by the same feelings, again advanced.

'He is ill,' said Jones to himself.

'He is in trouble,' thought Tom.

And they both took their allotted seats.

In the meantime George and Fanny, who had seldow met since the quarrel between the families, were kneeling side by side, now and then exchainging a few words and smiles. The Bashams made every effort not to look at each other, but their eyes found a common object in the two children, and sometimes met as if by some irresistable attraction; the young creatures were a kind of neautral ground, a living link of a chain, insensibly dawning them to each other. Every joyous smile of George or Fanny was like a sunbeam playing upon their hearts hatred and melting it away. Vainly did false shame and pride attempt to resist the genial influence. Nature was stronger than the strong.

And now each of them stole a glance at the brother.

'What a care worn look he has!' said Tom to himself.

'How delicate he looks!' thought Jones.

And as these thoughts passed at the same instant throngh their minds they stole a glance at each other.

At this moment the curate began to deliver his sermon, which according to the custom of the good man, was short; but before leaving the pulpit he pointed to George and Fanny as they stood there together holding the basket of loves.s

'You are aware,' continued the curate, 'that one of my predecessors, established at Sellack, his annual distribution, for which he left a provision in his will. His intention was, no doubt, to encourage you to live together in harmony, peace, and love; and it is no less the will of the God of love, who put this care for you into his heart; and therefore, my brethren when these children go round the church presenting you their baskets and repeating, according to the direction of the testator, 'Peace and Good Neighborhood,' therefore it is I would exhort each one of you to examine his own heart and when each puts forth his hand to take a share of the common bread, to do so as a pledge of mutual forgiveness.

With these words the curate quitted the pulpit, and George and Fanny began the distribution.

After going the rounds to the members of the chapter, they stopped at the bench occupied by their parents, and, as they presented the baskets, repeated in due course the words—'Peace and good Neighborhood.'

The brothers were evidently confused. They looked up, and Tom saw the furrowed brow of Jones, and Jones the pallid cheeks of Tom; both were deeply affected.

'Peace and good Neighborhood,' was uttered in a half whisper, and their hands met in the basket.

And now the ceremony over the two families left the church; the brothers walked out together though no word was exchanged till they reached the churchyard.

'Methinks we have both just made a promise to God,' said Tom, but without raising his eyes.—'And for my part, I desire no better than to keep it.'

'You cannot desire it more than I do,' said Jones; and if you wish it, will you prove it by letting the children dine at my house next Sunday.'

'With all my heart,' said Tom.

And what is to prevent your coming with them Tom? it can do you no harm, and may do you some good, as by that time my brother-in-law, the doctor will be with us.'

'I have no objection, Jones on condition that you find use for the hundred just left me as a legacy, and which I am quite at a loss to put out to advantage.'

At these words Jones quickly raised his head, and his eyes encountered the gaze of his brother.

'Ah, the curate told you I was in want of money!' exclaimed he.

'And told I you I was in want of a doctor!' replied Tom.

An exclamation of grateful surprise burst from the lips of both, as they rushed into each other's arms.

'Peace and good Neighborhood,' murmured a voice at their side; it was the curate and shaking hands with them both he said, 'Are not Peace and good Neighborhood happy words.'

A California Widow.

Some queer incidents in the world matrimonial, as well as in the police, since the acquisition of California. Some few, rumor, we regret to say will whisper, have not exercised the patience of Penelope, who kept spinning at her distaff whilst old Ulysses was fighting before Troy, or buffeting with old Neptune for nine years. It is apprehended that some explanation will have to be given when the martial tide shall flow back from the Pacific; but it is well to be exact as to date as may be seen from the following incident in real life;

An elderly gentleman and lady were riding a few days ago in an omnibus. Opposite to them sat a pleasant looking young married lady with a fine, chubby boy in her lap. Conversation arose between the parties. A steamer from Chagres had just arrived; and the good-looking lady, with the chubb, juvenile, wished to know the news, remarking that her husband had been away fifteen months that day, and she was very anxious to hear from him.

And then the good-looking lady proceeded to indulge in a long and pathetic dissertation on the discomforts and annoyances of wives when husbands go off and stay so long from their homes. 'True madam,' remarked the elderly gentleman, who had never known the pride and pleasure of paternity; 'but then that fine little fellow must be a great comfort to you,' chucking at the same time the jolly little fellow under the chin, who stared at the old gentleman's spectacles—'a remarkably fine boy; what may be his age, madam!'

'Just three months, sir,' replied the proud young mother.

'Three months!' remarked the elderly lady; 'three months; I thought you said your husband had been away fifteen months!'

The good-looking lady blushed very deeply but soon recovering the momentary confusion and remembering herself, 'Oh, but he has written once.'

ARRIVAL OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

With a MILLION OF GOLD DUST, and a Million and a Half more at the Isthmus.—With 500 Passengers.

TERRIBLE FIRE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Twenty-five Hundred Buildings burnt—Great loss Life and $ 12,000,000 of Property—San Francisco Bankrupt—Five men burnt alive in anBuilding—Destruction of Adam's & Co's. Office—Criminals Loose from Prison.

From the Ajta California—May 15th

We are indebted to the politeness of our fellow townsman, George E. Hinckley, for late files of the aboves named paper, from which we make the following exiracts. Mr. H. has recently returned from a successful trip to the mines of California. His favors were invaluable to us at this time, for which he will please accept our thanks.

The Crescent City brings over 500 passengers—nearly a million of dollars, and San Francisco dates to May 15. they are filled to the exclusion of nearly all other matter, with the particulars of the late disastrous calamity.

The fire it appears occurred on the 3d of May, the anniversary of the first great conflagration in that City

It commenced on Saturday night, a few minutes after 11, in the upholstering establishment of Baker & Meserve on the south side of the Plaza. In a moment the combustible material, of which it was composed, were in a blaze. The alarm bell startled the citizens from their repose and brought the noble firemen to the spot in a few minutes.

Ten minutes had hardly elapsed before the Monumentals were playing upon the fire steady stream, all to no purpose.

In one hour from the first outbreak the Standard office on Sacramento street, a brick building which had been stored great quantities of goods, fell topling to the ground.

The firemen worked like heroes at the peril of their lives; but their exertions were utterly powerless.

Buildings with the thickest walls and iron doors and shutters, built with a special view to making them fire-proof, formed no exception to the general destruction. They only delayed, but could not resist the fire.

Adams & Co's Express office on Montgomery street, nearly opposite the Custom House shared the fate of the rest of the block in which it stood.

The burnt district is about 3-4 of a mile from north to south by 1-3 of a mile from east to west, including 18 entire squares and parts of five or six others.

Besides the immense loss of property, which is variously estimated at from 5 to 20,000,000 dollars, but which will probably ranges between 10 and 12,000,000 dollars, we have to record the melancholy fact that 10 or 12 individuals lost their lives.

The most terrible scene was enacted in the iron store of Tarriffee & McCahill, at the corner of Montgomery and Sacramento streets.

Into this five persons had gone after the flames had reached it, and in order to save some valuable articles. They closed all iron window shutters, and doors, so that no draft of air might enter. When they found the house getting to hot to stay longer, they attempted to get out, but horrible to relate, the windows and doors had expanded so with heat that all their efforts were unable to open them, and all within perished in the flames.

The mass of shipping that crowd our harbor was in eminent danger of taking fire. Had one vessel caught the entire fleet would have, in all probability, been consumed.

The treasury is empty, and San Francisco is virtually bankrupt.

We have no prison wherein to confine the criminals who ran wild in our midst, doing evil continually.

The fact is that everything here is sadly damaged, and for the present in an awful condition of doubt and uncertainty.

☞ See Town Meeting warrant, on the next page.

SERENADE. We negelcted last week to thank our Weymouth friends, who so kindly saluted us at our residence during the stilly hours of night The pieces sung were pleasantly expressive, the voices soft and melodious, while the enchanting touches of the Guitar, added to the quietness of the hour, rendered the harmony most beautiful to the listening ear, and seemed to take—

"The entranced soul
And wrapt it in Elysium."

BLOODY AFFRAY.—We learn from The Granite Stae Whig. of Lebanon N. H. of an affray which occurred on Tuesday evening last at that village, which are as follows:—

A man by the name of Holmes Perry, who had for several days been under the influence of liquor on the evening referred to met an Irishman by the name of Canallie, and dunned him for a meat bill, which he could not pay at that time, but promised to pay it in a few days. Perry not being satisfied with it, struck him in the face, whereupon the Irishman raised his hand to ward off the blow, and with his other, struck him in the abdomen with a knife which he was holding in his hand, which proved fatal. Canallie immediately gave himself up to the authorities, and is now in jail awaiting his trial.

We have unintentionally omitted to notice this Discourse of Rev. Dr. Lunt until this late day, and must beg the learned author's pardon, to whom we are indebted for a copy.

The sentiments of this Discourse however, are not ephemeral; they are the rational views of a calm and close observer of passing political events, and therefore deserving of serious consideration.—The author endeavors to be just and charitable to men of all shades of political opinions, while, in accordance with his sense of duty, he expresses his own candidly and fearlessly.

We commend this Discourse to the attention of thinking men among us. They may find views different from their own, which will be none the less valuable on that account, if they consider them with a sincere desire to discover the truth. They will find a sensible and able opinion on our political duties at this juncture of public affairs, written by one who is a friend to order and good government.

The Discourse is for sale at our neighbor Gill's, Bookstore.

OLD SQUANTUM HOUSE. This romantic and favorite place of resort during the summer season is now under the management of Messrs, Bacon & Roberts, well-known in Boston as the gentlemenly proprietors of the Minerva Dining Saloon, in Temple Place. We are informed by several persons who have paid them a visit, that order, neatness and courtesy prevails; and that the epicurian dishes of the sea and sea-shore as well as the delicacies of the land are served up with alacrity and are deliciously palatable to the taste. We are glad that this picturesquo place is again to enjoy the popularity of former years; and we feel confident in speaking favorably of Messrs B. & R. and also to assure the public that they will receive kind and urbane treatment at their hands.

AMERICAN ART UNION. This institution was incorporated, by the Legislature of New York, several years since, for the promotion of taste in the Fine Arts and the encouragement of Artists. It is located in the City of New York. The subscribers for 1851, besides a share in the annual distribution, are entitled to a fine lage engraving called "Mexican News," and five smaller engraving,—Harvesting by Cropsey, Mount Washington by Kensett, old '76 and Young '48 by Woodville, Marion Crossing the Pedee by Rawney, and Bargaining for a Horse by Mount. Also the Monthly Bulletin, regularly after subscription, which is alone worth the price of membership.

The subscription, which is five dollars, received by JOHN A. GREEN, Honorary Secretary.

POETRY.

Written for the Quincy Patriot.

THE SHOEMAKERS GRAVE.

It lies amid the granite hills—
Far from home and friends away,
Where sighing winds and sparkling rills.
His requiem chant from day to day:
The trees their branches mournful wave
Above his dark and narrow bed;
No stone to mark his lonely grave,
The silent dwelling of the dead,

Yet he was once a favorite child—
Loving, beloved by parents dear;
Once happy friends around him smiled—
Life's morning sun shone bright and clear;
But fate compelled him far to rove,
Away from friendship's sacred tie—
Far from a watchful mother's love,
He gave his last expiring sigh.

Strange faces stood around his bed—
Strange voices sounded in his ear;
He died! none wept the early dead,
As strangers bore his lonely bier;
Here in this dark secluded spot,
He rests from earthly sorrows face,
By all save distant friends forgot,
He still lives in their memory.

Proud marble tombs may mark the place
Where rank and wealth and honor's lie;
The poet's fire, the artist's grace,
May hand them to posterity;
They seem to live, types of their class
Towering above the murmured dead,
As if distinction made the grass
A whit more green above their head.

Sleep! son of toil, 'twere better far
To rest unknown save by a few,
Who led by friendships guiding star,
Will mourn as friends sincere and true;
Their honest tears, the waving trees,
Are trophies to deck the sod,
While the robin's song borne on the breeze
Flouts musical to Nature's God.

And at the pensive twilight hour,
When western hills are capped with gold—
When fancy rules with boundless power,
And Angels sweet communion hold,
I'll seek thy grave, my tribute bring—
I'll speak to thee with whispering breath—
I'll think thee listening while I sing,
The gloomy melody of Death.

SMILE UPON THE FALLEN.

Oh, smile upon the fallen,—
It perhaps may heal a smart;
It may cause a flow of gladness
To warm a frozen heart;
And cause a gloom to change into
A smile of other years,
When everything was happiness,
And all unknown were tears.

Oh, smile upon the fallen—
Think not because 'tis so,
That in their hearts no feelings live,
No sweet affections flow,
Think not because their deeds were dark,
Grim feelings haunt them still?
Remember thou, repentance true
The dark'st heart may fill.

Oh, smile upon the fallen—
The heart that suffer'd scorn,
Though crush'd, has tender impulses—
Though trampled on, may own
Rare gems, as bright as ever lived
In hearts that ne'er have known
The pangs, the pains, the hopeless hours,
The darkest heart may fill.

Oh, smile upon the fallen—
Look kindly in their face,
There are plenty who can frown on them
But few the smiles they trace,
Why then, should'st thou thy grim look add
When thou a smile may'st use?
A smile which may into their hearts
A ray of hope infuse.

Oh, smile upon the fallen—
Who knows but from above,
The angels may be looking on
With smiles of happy love?
And then, perchance the fallen one
May offer up a prayer,
That Heaven may bless thee in thy plans,
And send thy life be fair,

Oh, smile upon the fallen—
Remember drooping flowers
Do raise their heads when Suns do smile,
Are nourish'd by kind showers.
Then smile upon the fallen,
It perhaps may heal a smart—
It may cause a flow of gladness
To warm the frozen heart.

MISCELLANY.

The Door Scraper.
—OR—
The Influence of School on Home.

It is to be regretted that our school committees pay so little regard to manners, in the selection of teachers, and if their morals are good and their aquaintace with the common branches of study respectable, employ them without regard to the question whether they are courteous, refined and gentlemanly in their address and behavoir. Now, what the teacher is, in this respect, the pupils will generally be, and, unless they see better patterns at home, the standard of the teachers will be theirs also. If they see the teacher addicted to any habit, they will think it manly to imitate him: if he spits upon the floor, the child will do the same.—If his boots are seldom cleaned, the child will be more likely to boast that he brings more mud into the school than the master does, than he will that his shoes are clean and the master's are dirty.

We were led into this train of remarks, by an incident which took place in a village of Massachusetts, where the teacher was accustomed to regard his personal appearance, and to require some attention to theirs from his pupils. When he took charge of the school, he noticed that the pupils, in muddy weather, were accustomed to enter the school room and stamp the mud upon the floor, or carry it to the seats and soil the floor for a large space around them. No sweeping could clean such a floor, and, of course, none had been attempted more than once a week. Determined to make an attempt at reform, the teacher obtained a piece of iron hoop, and nailing one end to the door, he fastened the other to a walnut stake, that he drove into the ground. Every child was required to scrape his shoes before he entered the room, and the consequence was that the true floor became visible through the crust that covered it. The next step was to get a rug for the entry, and a neat farmer's wife very readily gave him an old rug that she could spare. It did not take him long to induce the habit of scraping and wiping and wiping the shoes, and a lad or miss who did not do this, was soon noticed by the rest, and made to feel that he or she had not done all that was required. Soon after the rug was introduced, the teacher ventured to have the whole floor of the school room washed, washed, not scoured, for he had to do it on Saturday afternoon, and washing was all he was competent to do. When the scholars came on Monday morning it was evident they were taken by surprise. They had never seen the like before, the very knots in the floor were visible, and they gave several extra rubs and scrapes before they ventured to set foot on the beauties so strangely exposed. This is always the case, and we have known a man, who exercised the muscles of his under jaw by chewing tobacco, and who would have spirted the saliva without compunction upon the floor of the school room, running round a carpeted room like a crazy man, to find the place of deposit for his filth. So true is it that neatness begets neatness, and a nice school room is better treated by the unneat than a neglected one. The teacher thus introduced one thing after another, taking care not to go to fast, and, although he had no penalty for the breach of the rules of neatness, he introdnced a public sentiment which restrained the pupils more effectually than the rod; and, as his own example was always made to second his rules, the children found no hardship or injustice in doing them.

Amongst the scholars, was one little fellow about eight years old, named Freddy Gerrish, whose parents were poor, and cared but little for appearances, if the children had bread enough to eat from day to day. Freddy was the oldest of five children, and when not at school he was generally minding his little brothers and children, as the Irish term what we call taking care of them. One day, on his way home from school he found an iron hoop, and before night he had a scraper at the only door of the house. It so happened that, when his father came home, his boots were covered with bog mud, and almost for the first time in his life he looked round for something to clean them. The scraper, that Freddy had placed there, was just the thing, and the little fellow was praised for his ingenuity. Soon after a sheep was killed by a dog in the field near Mr. Gerrish's house and no one cared for it. Freddy offered to burry it if he might have the skin, which had little wool on it. He borrowed a jack-knife of a larger boy, and soon stripped off the skin from the body and then cutting as large a square out of it as he could, he went home and proposed to his mother to nail it down in the entry. This was done to please Freddy, and the baby was allowed to sit on it until father came home.

The effect of Freddy's attempt to reform was soon felt, and his mother was no longer heard to say as she often had done. 'It's no use to sweep.'

'Wife,' said Mr. Gerrish one evening, 'your floor is whiter than the wall, I must get some lime and whitewash a little, for Freddy's scraper seems to have a tail to it.'

The room was shining white before another day was passed, and as the cooking utensils began to look ill, standing around the stove, Mr. Gerrish, who was a good farmer, changed work with a carpenter, and had a neat set of shelves made with a cupboard under them. One day after she had scoured the floor, Mrs. Gerish said to herself, 'I wonder whether I cannot paint this floor well enough for poor people, for though a white floor looks well, it is easier to clean a painted one.'

Freddy was despatched to the coachmaker's to see what price some suitable paint would cost.

'How large is your room?' said the man, who had often noticed that Freddy was never seen among the boys that were doing mischief.

'Four times as long as I can reach one way and five times the other,' said Freddy.

The man then applied the rule to Freddy's arm, and said. 'It will cost you half a dollar.'

'But, who is to do the painting?' said the man.

'Mother sir is going to try, because she cannot afford to pay for the paint and painting too, and she wants to do it before father comes home.'

'You love her, don't you?' said the coach maker.

'I guess I do,' said Freddy, 'and she loves me' too, because I made a scraper at the door, like master Hall's at the school. She says if it had not been for the scraper, she never would have thought of the paint, and we are going to stay in the bed room or out o' doors till the paint is dry.'

'I see through it said the man. 'Go home and tell your mother I will come presently and paint the floor for nothing.'

The boy was starting off, when the coach maker recollected that half the charm was to consist in the wife's doing the work, and surprising her husband with a floor painted by her own hand, and he called the boy back and asked him if his mother had any money.

'A little,' said he, 'she bought some yarn and knit three pair of stockings while the baby was asleep, and sold them.'

'Here is the paint,' said the man,' 'I give it to you because you love your mother.'

The little fellow's eyes glared in astonishment at the idea of possessing so much paint, and of being paid for so easy a task as loving his mother, and as the big tears began to roll down his cheeks, he said.

'Mother will be able to buy the Bible now.'

'What Bible?' said the coach maker, who had become interested in the boy.

'The Bible for me to read every night and morning, as the master does.'

'I have some Bible to give away,' said the man, 'and if you will not spill the paint, you may take her one under your arm.'

'I declare,' said Freddy, 'I don't know what mother will say to all this.—How will she pay you, sir?'

'Would you like to do a little work for me, my little fellow?'

'I guess I should,' said Freddy, 'if I was big enough I would work for you ever so long.'

'I want just such a scraper at my door, as you made your father, and if you will make me one, I will take it in full pay for the paint and Bible.'

'I can't make one good one good enough for you,' said Freddy, bashfully.

'That is my look out,' said the man, 'so carry home the paint, and come when you can and make the scraper.'

Freddy went home, and when his mother saw him with a book under one arm, and with both hands holding on the paint pot she exclaimed.

'Why, Freddy, what have you been and done? I only told you to ask the price of the paint.'

'I know it,' said Freddy, 'but the man made a trade with me, and he is to give me all these, if I will make him a scraper for his door, and I am going to do it.'

To make a long story short, the scraper at the school door was the making of Mr. Gerrish and his family. The entire change of habits introduced into their humble dwelling, not only led to neatness and order, but to thrift and comfort. The scraper was made for the coach maker, who continued to do a hundred other friendly acts for the family. Freddy obtained an excellent education, and is an intelligent and wealthy farmer, and when he built his New house he carefully placed the old scraper by the side of the door, as if it were a tailsman. Master Hall taught from district to district, and being of a slender constitution' his health early failed and he was quietly laid in the church yard of a country town, unconscious that the seed he had shown had ever produced any fruit like that we have described. Freddy could never discover his resting place, but he erected a neat cenotaph to his memory near the school house, which he has also rebuilt, and once a year he collects the children of the village around it, and tells them the story of the scraper at the old school room door.

Love Scene.

The following pasage from 'The Glenns, a family History, by D. L. McGonnell,' will be quite a relief, varticularly to those who would wear Bloomer dresses.

'Fanny!' he said, in a tone of not to be mistaken tenderness. She turned quickly toward him, and his voice had called the blood in glowing blushes to her cheeks.

'What! you hear,' she exclaimed in a voice as clear and ringing as a silver bell: 'I did not hear you come to the gate.'

'I have been standing here for some minutes,' he said, as she stepped down upon the walk and moved slowly towards him.

'Watching me, were you?' she said laughing gaily. 'Do you think me handsome? Come, now, tell me the truth."

'Handsome is not the word,' said he, with a look which attested his sincerity.

'what is the word, then? Come, confess; I'll have no secrets kept from me.' She raised her finger with a gesture of playful imperiousness; but before he could answer, she changed her tone and resumed, 'Come in—I ought to have said so sooner.'

'No,' he replied, 'I came to ask you whether you would not walk with me this beautiful afternoon, so go in and get a sun-bonnet, and let us walk over to the old trysting tree.'

'It is very improper,' she answered, 'for a young lady to go a maying with a young gentleman on a Sunday, all alone.' Yet as she spoke, her clear glad laugh rang merrily among the trees, and echoed beyond the road.

'But,' she resumed, with mock solemnity, 'I will go with you this time, if you will never ask me to do so again.'

'Agreed,' said he, 'and I will make the same pledge every Sunday till——'

'Till when?' she demanded with a look which could only be denominated quizzical.

'Till the time,' he answered, 'when there will no longer be any impropriety in our being alone in any place at any time.'

'And, pray, when will that be?' she asked, with a flash in her soft, brown eye which manifested that her question was superfluous.

'When we are married,' said he.

'Oh!' she exclaimed, with a well acted start as if suddenly enlightened. She laughed as pleasantly as if that time had come already and tripped cheerfully away to get her bonnet.

Touching Story.

The following affecting narrative purports to have been given by a father to his son, as a warning derived from his own bitter experience of the sin of grieving and resisting a dear mother's love and counsel.

What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till she reached her own door.'

'It is time now, she said. 'Go my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said.'

'I shan't go to school,' said I.

She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly:

'Certainly you will go, Alfred, I command you.'

'I will not!' said I with a tone of defiance.'

'One of two things you must do, Alfred—either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room, and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future.'

'I dare you to do it,' said I, 'you can't get me up stairs.'

'Alfred, choose now,' said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

'If you touch me I will kick you,' said I, in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

'Will you go, Alfred?'

'No!' I replied qute quailed beneath her eye.

'Then follow me,' said she as she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—oh, my son, hear me! I raised my foot and kicked her; my sainted mother! How my head reels as the torrent of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother; a feeble woman; my mother? She staggered back a few steps, and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. 'Oh! Heavenly Father,' she cried, 'forgive him—he knows not what he does!' The gardner just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support herself, he stopped; she beckoned him in. 'Take this boy up stairs and look him in his room,' said she, and turned from me. Looking back as she entering her room, she gave me such a look it will forever follow me; it was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest love, it was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought for a moment I would fling myself from the open window, and dash my brains out, but I felt afraid to do it. I was not penitant. At times my heart was subdued but my stubborn pride rose in an instant, and bade me not yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed and fell asleep. Just at twilight I heard a footstep approach the door. It was my sirter.

'What may I tell mother from you?' she asked.

'Nothing,'

'Oh Alfred! for my sake, for all our sakes, say that you are sorry; let me tell mother that you are sorry. She longs to forgive you.'

I would not answer. I heard her footsteps slowly retreating, and again I flung myself on the bed to pass another wretched and fearful night.

Another footstep, slower and feebler than my sister's disturbed me. A voice called me by name. It was my mother's.

'Alfred, my son, shall I come? Are you sorry for what you have done?' she asked.

I cannot tell what influence, operating at that moment, made me speak adverse to my feelings. The gentle voice of my mother that thrilled through me, melted the ice from my obdurate heart and I longed to throw myself on her neck, but I did not. But my words gave the lie to my heart, when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back, but I did not.

I was awakened from my uneasy slumber by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood by my bedside.

Get up, Alfred. Oh, don't wait a minute! Get up, and come with me. Mother is dying.

I thought I was yet dreaming, but I got up mechanically and followed my sister. On the bed pale and cold as marble lay my mother. She had not undressed. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest;—arising to go again to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart and was borne senseless to her own room.

I cannot tell you in my agony as I looked upon her—my remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart burnt in my bosom my brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence.

Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand—her eyes unclosed. She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me and moved her lips. I could not understand her words 'Mother, Mother,' I shrieked 'say only that you forgive me.' She could not say it with her lips but, her hand pressed mine. She smilad upon me, and lifting her thin, white hands, she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upwards. She moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form, till my gentle siste removed me. The joy of youth had let me forever.

Boys who spurn a mother's control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong who think it only to resist her authority, or yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for your future years.

Young Ladies and Matrimony.

Florence Hay, who sat for her portrait to Mr. Willis, of the 'Home Journal,' has caused a fluttering among the hearts of the unmarried lady readers of that paper. 'Minnie Moulson has spoken and now Eve Gray speaks as follows;

'Minnie Moulson' says, we have not sufficient moral courage to remain single.' I agree with her as to the abscence of anything attractive in the large portion of men we meet: but I think we wish to marry in the abstract, even if we do not find one worthey of us; that it is a part of nature that women with warm rich hearts and cultivated minds, should look for the comforts and charms of married life. I mean not those who are ambitious, and seek to be the head of an establishment; but those who desire to be known and loved at home—and such are the large majority of us. But I would say that the grand office and destiny of our sex is maternity—that every woman not spoiled by some silly habit, which becomes stronger than her nature, feels this; and feels that while she remains single, she is doing violence to nature and is deprived of the dearest charms of the life.

We feel that it was intended by an all wise Providence that every woman should be a mother. This is not merely physical, but it is part of our heart. True, we longed to be pressed to the breast of man in whom we see so much purity, nobleness and generosity—the man we so much love—we dream that his cheek rests against ours—feel the soft preasure of his hand—we have sweet dreams of love; but by far the dearest pleasure ever a real woman felt, was when the child of the man she loves lay upon her breast.

In this world of Brainless men, but few of us can find men to love, at least at all like our ideal; and this is shown by the fact that so many women do not marry the first man who offers.

Most women—even girls yet in their teens—wish for their own child to love. Affectation may say that it is immodest, but it springs from a higher law' than of society, it is the law of God.

Seeing that nature intended us for particular purposes, I can see in 'Folorence Hay' the true women when she says that 'single years are wasted.'

I think 'Minnie Mouison' part right when she says. 'Nine tenths of the women of the present day marry with no other feelings towards their husbands than sheer indifference.' But many women are not capable of a high and holy love, and much of that which they can feel is the result of association. But no woman can look with 'sheer indifference' upon the father of of her child.

I have written so much that I shall scarce have room for what I took up my pen to say.

I am much inclined to think that the fear superior women have, of seeming immodest in showing a preference for sueh men as they really do admire, has a tendancy to drive many from them to the lighter sort of wemen. I do not mean that she should offer herself; when she sees one whom she admires she should evince plainly that she is pleased with his company and conversation, and not think of anything immodest, as there is really not.

But if she treats him as indifferent women treat him very likely there will be a mistake. Many men are proud, and will not sue for even a woman they love.

Hercules.

When Hercules was received into Heaven among all its inhabitants greeted Juno the first. All Heaven, and Juno herself, were astonished at it.

'Dost thou meet in such a manner thy enemy?' cries one to him.

'Yes, she herself,' answered Hercules.—'Only her persecutions gave me an opportunity to perform those deeds by which I have deserved heaven.'

Olympus approved the answer of the new god, and Junn was reconciled.

Science of Going to Bed.

The earth is a magnect, with magificent currents constantly playing around it. The human body is also a magnet, and when the body is placed in certain relations to the earth these currents harmoniz—when in any other position they conflict. When one position should be chosen in which the magnetic currents of the earth and the body will not conflict. This position, as indicated by theory, and known by experiment is to lie with the head towards the north pole. Persons who sleep with their heads in the oposite direction, or lying crosswise, are liable to fall into various nervous disorders. When they go back to the right position, these disorders, if not to deeply impressed upon the constitution, soon vanish.—Sensitive persons are always more refreshed by sleep when their heads point due north.—Architects, in planning houses, should bear this principle in mind.

Good Story.

A young American gentleman, a Mr. P——, who is visiting Paris, with the 'old folks,' went to a masked ball to see the elephant and have some fun. His great desire was to meet an angel of the fair sex. He first looked all round waiting to make a decision the moment he should find a fine waist and small feet. These beauties he discovered in a domino of small figure who took his arm and began to intrigue with him. The lady told him his name, the city of the United States from which he was, and after all these preliminaries she related to him many flirting excursions which he had made last year at Saratoga and at Newport. All these things, whispered in good English, were puzzling to Mr. P.; and in order to find out who was his fair companion, he invited her to supper in a private cabinet. The lady at first refused; but after some time she consented, and the couple started in a carriage for the well known restaurant of Vachette where all Americans take their meals. A cabinet was opened, the final petit souper was ordered, and when they came to eat, the lady was obliged to take off her mask, Mr. P. discovered in her—who? Guess it. You give it up? Yes. She was his mother! The romance was over, and he took the joke the best way he could. Mrs. P. is one of the prettiest American ladies in Paris, and no one, when looking at her, considering the freshness of her complexion and the beauty of her charms, would suppose that she had a son twenty-three years old.

An old maid, not remarkable for beauty was recently so much shocked at beholding her face in the glass, that she fainted away.

Miubana said of a man who was exceedingly fat, that God had created him only to show to what point the human skin could stretch without breaking.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, JUNE 28th, 1851.

John A. Green, Editor.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS---With the present number of the Quincy Patriot our connection therewith will close. For the long period of fourteen and a half years have we presented you each and every week, a summary of passing events, together with such articles, cautiously written or carefully selected, as we deemed interesting and instructive. For the generous patronage which you have awarded us, and which has sustained us thro' good report and through evil report---in gladness and in sorrow, we return you our sincerest thanks; and we cannot but look back with feelings of pride and satisfaction at the goodly number of kind friends who cheered and encouraged our earliest labors, and who are yet with us at the close. We want words to express our gratitude to them. There were others too, who aided us when we first essayed our flight on almost unfledged wings, upon whose ears our voice, in whatever words or tone, would fall alike unheeded; though the cold earth has closed forever over their inanimate forms, yet in our heart of hearts will their memories be ever gratefully enshrined.

In our editorial career we have endeavored to respect the feelings of all—to withhold no praise where praise was due, and if we have had occasion to censure, our aim has been, that, while we exposed the error we uttered no language

"Which, in its widest scope could cause a tear,"

If in the heat of controversy articles have been admitted in our columns which upon cool reflection and careful consideration, might be deemed too pointed or severe, we plead in extenuation the multiplicity of cares incident to our position—and if through oversight or want of care on our part one hard thought has been breathed or one unkind word has been uttered, by which the feelings of the humblest or the highest have been lacerated---of such we ask forgiveness, and trustingly hope that with the setting of this day's sun such wounds will be wholly healed and the traces thereof be no longer remembered.

And now we must say farewell---yet fain would we linger awhile ere we sever that alliance which has so long been to us a source of satisfaction and pleasure. We hope that you will not forget us---and if we should chance at some future period to come before you in a fairer garb and with brighter prospects, we fondly trust that old friendships will be revived---broken ties will be united, and that we shall thus renew those pleasant associations which have tinged the pathway of our life with a bright and sunny hue. Good bye.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS.

Our Advertising Friends are requested to bring in their favors for next week, as early as TUESDAY or WEDNESDAY,—as we shall probably go to press on Thursday Morning, to enable our people to participate in the pleasures of the National Holiday that falls on Friday.

NEW RATES OF POSTAGE.

Next Tuesday the great and desirable reform in our postage system goes into operation, by which the postage on a letter weighing half an ounce or under, for a distance not over 3000 miles, in the United States, is reduced to three cents if pre-paid, and to five cents if not prepaid. As there are none of our readers, who are not interested, more or less, in this reduction, we again publish the rates as established by law.

It will be seen that there has also been a great reduction in the rates of Newspaper postage. After Tuesday next, the postage for one year of a paper of the usual size, a distance not over 50 miles is only one dollar; for any distance not exceeding 200 miles, two dollars.

Also the Monthly Bulletin, regularly after subscription, which is alone worth the price of membership.

The subscription, which is five dollars, received by JOHN A. GREEN, Honorary Secretary.

JENNY LIND CONCERTS

Jenny Lind announced her Concert last evening as the last which she will entertain the Bostonians with at present.

The Times has a very sensible article on the course which the Managers of these Concerts have pursued from first to last. It says:

"Does Jenny Lind sing only for the rich? Has she no regard for the poorer classes? Is her only aim to get money? Would she tempt the poor to rob their families in order to gratify a desire to hear her sing? I cannot believe it:

Then why will she not gratify people of moderate circumstances, by giving a Concert, the tickets for which shall not be over one dollar? that portion of the community are as fond of good music as their more wealthy neighbors; and their families too, delight in sweet sounds, but cannot be gratified because the price of admission is enormous. Most certainly, when her clear and benevolent mind takes a deliberate view of this subject, she will see and feel the force of the question,---why are the tickets to my concerts in Republican America, so costly, that none but the wealthy can afford to purchase them?"

BEEFSTEAKS. Until we read the following which we find in an exchange paper, we had no idea that the Romans were the first discoverers of beefsteaks Nor do we altogether believe it now, although we are willing that any of our readers may differ with us. Here is the article:

Beefsteaks were discovered by a Roman priest, whose name we forget, though it can be found in a book the title of which we do not remember. He had been broiling a piece of beef to be offered to the God in whose temple he officiated, and seizing it by the thumb and finger for the purpose of conveying it to the altar, he found it so hot that he was compelled to drop it, and instinctively placed the thumb and finger in his mouth. They happened to be covered with the juice of the steak which he tasted, and lost all sense of pain in the equisite enjoyment thus coveyed to the palate. Being a man of genius, he proceeded to place another slice on the coals, which, being cooked, he incontinently devoured it, loosing sight of his official duties, which acquired that the meat should be placed before the god. For a long time he pursued this course, util his sleek appearance attention, and he was watched and the secret discovered. He would have been put to death, but for the judges on his trial eating a steak, whereupon he was acquitted, and made Pontifex Maximus, as a reward for the benefit he had conferred on mankind. Beefsteaks became the rage, and there were broils continually going on all over the empire; for the Romans were a little more quick witted than the Chinese, who deemed it necessary to burn down a house to roast a pig, and did not suppose that steaks could be cooked only in temples. It was a blessed day for mortals when the priest burnt his fingers.

The Meanest kind of a Family. Some Editor down South, describing a family of his acquaintance, says they were so mean they had to die by subscription.

Ladies Meeting on the New Costume.—A meeting was recently held in the city of N. York in relation to the new costume. The meeting was numerously attended. After an animated address by one of the ladies, the following resolutions were passed.

Whereas, The present fashion of Female Dress is detrimental to health, inconvenient, burthensome, uncomfortable, uncleanly, and less becoming than other styles that might be adopted;

Whereas, This fashion is of foreign origin, and with all its disadvantages, is followed by our countrywomen, with a slavish subserviency, unworthy of a free people; thereupon,

Resolved, That we recommend and adopt some style of dress which will relieve us of our present oppressive and exhausting burdens: which will allow us that freedom of motion which is indispensable to usefulness or enjoyment; which will not condemn us to the offices of street-sweepers and public scavengers; and which will render us independent of the caprices of Foreign Courts and French modistes.

Resolved, That we claim the right to wear such a dress as is decent, becoming, proper for our duties, and calculated to promote ease, comfort and health.

Resolved, That Fashion, having often reconciled us to costumes that are now seen to be hideous, be now appealed to, to sanction one which combines the elements of use and beauty.

Resolved, That we call on our sisters everywhere to declare, by words and deeds, their independence of hurtful and degrading fashions, and to adopt such styles of dress as may best promote health, usefulness, comfort and real beauty.

Resolved, That the costume we recommend is not Turkish nor Persian, but American; the growth of our own wants, the product of our skill, and the sign of our independence.

The resolutions were warmly applauded, and passed almost unanimously.

POETRY.

MAY DAY.

LINES on seeing the Children of the West District School enjoying the rural sports of May Day.

BY THOMAS MONTJOY.

Happy Children, bent on pleasure,
Deck'd in garb of Holiday;
Smiling faces, Nature's graces,
Greet the lovely morn of May.

Lightly tripping through the wildwood—
Free from care, hearts void of guile;
Sportive p'aying, careless straying,
Heaven reflected in each smile.

Bounteous' Nature, fresh disclosing
Treasures from the lap of earth;
Flowrets springing, Forest ringing
With shouts of joy and youthful mirth.

Sweet your pastime, wreathing garlands
Of blossoms tipt with silver dew;
Springlets' streaming, spray drops gleaming,
Bright be your hours, your sorrows few.

Oh give me back those sunny hours—
Thrice blissful hours, that knew no stain;
When I like you was happy too,
As free from worldly care or pain.

Fast my tide of life is ebbing,
Our halcyon days soon pass away;
No look endearing; all dark, uncheering,
Hope even sheds a doubtful ray.

Darksome clouds my pathway shading—
Fortune smiles on me no more;
The past is gone—I'm all alone,
My dreams of bliss are sadly o'er.

Farewell Children, bent on pleasure,
Though fate should call me far away,
Each tender feeling, o'er me stealing,
Will image forth your merry May.

Quincy, May 2d, 1851.

MY MOTHER'S BIBLE.

This Book is all that's left me now!
Tears will unbidden start—
With faltering lip and throbbing brow,
I press it to my heart.
For many generations passed,
Here is one family tree;
My mother's hands this Bible clasped—
She, dying, gave it me.

Ah! well do I remember those Whose names these records bear;
Who round the hearth stone used to close,
After the evening prayer,
And speak of what these pages said,
In tones my heart would thrill!
Though they are with the silent dead,
Here are they living still!

My father read this holy book
To brothers, sisters dear—
How calm was my poor mother's look,
Who learned God's Word to hear.
Her angel face—I see it yet!
What thronging memories come!
Again that little group is met
Within the wall of home!

Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
When all were false I've found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.
The mines of earth no treasures give
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live
It taught me how to die.

ANECDOTES.

A Western paper says: "Nearly all the suicides in this country are foreigners. Americans rarely make away themselves, for nearly every one thinks he has a chance of becoming President; and, at any rate, his curiosity prompts him to live on just to see what he will come to.

An Irishwoman who had kept a little grocery, was brought to her death-bed, and was on the point of breathing her last, when she called her husband to her bed-side:—"Jamie," she faintly said, "ther's Missus Mullony—she owes me six shillings." Och!' exclaimed her husband, "Bidy, darlint, ye're sensible to the last!" "Yis, dear; an ther's Missus McCrawe, I owe her half a-sovereign." "Och! be jabbers, and ye're as footish as ever."

We are a little afraid (says the Knickerbocker) that the following is intended as a "hard hit" at some of the ultra-reformers of these latter days.

"How well it is the sun and moon
Are placed so very high,
That no presuming man can reach
To pluck them from the sky!

"If 't were not so, I do believe
That some reforming ass
Would soon attempt to take them down
To light the world with GAS!"

A fastidious boarder, at a cheap boarding house, lately appeared at the table, when a rather unsavory Ham presented itself for discussion. It looked well; but, said the boarder to his host, "How confoundedly it smells!" "Well," replied his keeper, "What o' that?" 'Take hold man; you came to the table to eat your victuals, not to smell 'em."

He will not want time for his duty, that does not want a heart for it.

A GOOD STORY

From the Boston Commonwealth

THE TEA ROSE.

BY MRS. H. E. BEECHER STOWE.

PART I.

There it stood in its little green pot, in a light ebony stand, in the window of a drawing-room. The rich costly curtains, with their costly fringes, swept down on either side of it, and around it glittered many a rare and fanciful trifle which wealth can procure for luxury, and yet that simple rose was the loveliest of them all. So pure it looked, with its leaves just touched with that delicate blush tint, peculiar to its kind, its cup so perfect, its head bending as if it were melting away in its own richness. Who could not make anything like the living flower?

But the sunlight that streamed in at the window revealed something fairer than the rose. Reclined on an ottoman, in a deep recess, and intently engaged with a book, lay the original, the living counterpart of that lovely flower. The cheek so pale, so spiritual, the brow so full of high thought, the fair forehead, the downcast lashes, and the expressive beautiful mouth, so sorrowful, yet so patient and sweet—it seemed like the realization of a dream.

'Florence!—Florence!' echoed a clear, musical voice, in a sweet impatient tone, from your head, reader, and you will see a gay, sparkling maiden, the very model of a little willful elf, born of mischief and fun, with a dancing eye, a foot that seemed created to touch the carpet, and a smile that was made by dimples that it seemed like sunbeams, smiles at once. 'Come Florence, come! Come, the little fairy, and talk with a poor mortal,—come descend from your cloud!'

The fair apparation thus adjured, started, looking up, revealed just the eyes that she intended to see beneath such lids; eyes of such magic and rich as a strain of sad music.

'I say, cousin,' said the 'darke,' 'you have been thinking what you are to do when the pet rose when you go to New York, and create great consternation you are going to make; you know it would be a sad pity to have such a scatter brain as I am. I do believe, that's a fact; that is, I like a quiet, cut off and tied up, to carry; but as to all this tending and fussing necessary to keep them growing, I'm not in that line.'

'Make yourself quite easy as to that,' said Florence, with a smile, 'I've no fancy of calling upon your talents; I have one for my favorite.'

'Oh, then you know just what I have to say; Mrs. Marshall, I presume you are speaking to you; she was here yesterday, I was very pathetic upon the subject of her the loss that your favorite would be, and so forth, and she said how dreadful it should be to have it in her green house such a fine state now, so full of buds; I told her I knew you would like it of all things, give it to her; you were always so, Mrs. Marshall, you know.'

'Nay, Kate, I'm sorry, but I have already engaged it.'

'Who can it be to? You have so many mates here.'

'Oh, only one of my odd fancies.'

'But do tell me, Florence.'

'Well, cousin, you know the little old to whom we give sewing.'

'What, little Mary Stephens? How can This is just of a piece, Florence, with other motherly old-maidish ways; dolls for poor children, making caps, knitting socks for all the dirty little babies region round about. I do believe you have made more calls in those two smelling alleys back of our house than you have in Chesnut-street, though everybody has been half dying to and now to crown all, you must give a little bijou to a seamstress girl, when your most intimate friends, in your set, would value it so highly. What the can people in their circumstances do flowers?'

'Just the same that I do,' replied calmly. 'Have you never noticed the girl never comes here without looking fully at the opening buds; and do remember the morning when she pretily if I would let her mother come it, she was so fond of flowers?'

'But, Florence, only think of the er standing on a table, with ham, and flour, and stifled in the close where Mrs. Stephens and her daughage, to wash, iron, cook, and nurse what besides.'

'Well, Kate, and if I were obliged one coarse room, and wash, iron,
